

MONEY FLOWS IN AROOSTOOK

Potato Empire Home of "Fast Horses and Fine Women"

Presque Isle, Me., Sept. 27—For years we've read and heard of Kentucky, the Blue Grass country, but here, at the extreme northeastern corner of the United States, is a second blue-blooded, hard-living land, Aroostook county, Me., the potato empire, home of fast horses, fine women and free money.

Aroostook county, or more particularly that part of it which is the potato belt, has not been called an empire without reason. Set off apart by wilderness and the Canadian border, the potato belt might well be an independent state. Here, in Houlton, Presque Isle, Fort Fairfield and Caribou are growing thriving businesses; modern stores, smart shops. And this empire, 100 miles long from north-west to southeast, and 30 miles wide, produces one-sixth to one-eighth of the potato crop of the United States, the exact fraction varying from year to year. Government experts say that the Maine crop for 1934—and that means primarily that of Aroostook—will reach the 50,000,000 bushels mark.

Kentucky has its thoroughbreds, its Derby; but if you wish racing where whole communities rise in arms, see Aroostook's harness races, where gallant horses and skilful drivers battle in a game known as the trickiest of the sport of kings.

If you would question the enthusiasm accorded this sport here, see Presque Isle's monument to John R. Braden, her king of harness horses.

Fairest of Women

Or, if your interest is fine women, you'll find the fairest of the fair in the Aroostook empire. They attend the best schools and colleges in the East.

Here in Aroostook shops they buy the counterparts of frocks, gowns and hats you see on Park avenue or Brookline's byways. They have the health of old New England stock plus the smartness of the ultra-modern. The day of the buxom lass has passed. Farming as it is done in Aroostook is distinctly big business. The potato grower is alert, modern, ready to take advantage of any trend of the market. He will buy or sell, as the situation warrants. That's how big money is made, or lost, here. First, last and always, the farmers of this potato empire are big business men.

Aroostook is a hard-living land by right of inheritance. Sixty years ago, for this country is young as countries go, her pioneers began to turn seriously to farming, to clear their land, to drive the forests back. And so, fighting with every means at her command, Aroostook has cleared 150,000 acres of potato land, and now raises more potatoes than any state in the Union. Further, due in great part to the efforts of the Maine state department of agriculture, Maine's yield per acre is greater than that of any other state—that from land won by weary years of back-breaking work from the desolate wilderness that was, and still is, the Great North Woods of Maine. Now buyers from Florida and Virginia come here to buy their seed.

Youth Carries On

The young men of Aroostook have the same educational opportunities offered their sisters. Many are educated at Yale, Harvard and Princeton. Others study agricultural courses at the University of Maine. Then they enter their fathers' business, carry on Maine's long fight for recognition as the world's leading potato producing area.

In the world of sports those of this northern potato belt have many things right in their own back yard. Though they talk of the Rainbow and the Endeavour, of international tennis and the next world's series, they never forget that the same Maine wilderness from which they captured their potato lands has much to offer them in the way of recreation. Next door to one of the finest fishing and hunting countries in the world, they are not hesitant in taking advantage of that fact.

The Fort Fairfield Country Club is a recreational and social centre for potato belt society. There young Aroostook plays tennis, and all ages play golf. And there, just to be different, you park your car in Maine, step into the clubhouse, which is in Canada, and play golf, in Canada. Beside the golf course stretch the potato fields of Maine and Canada.

Having heard of hospitality in the West and South, you may not expect much of the extreme north. But the Aroostook folk are open-handed, warm-hearted, ready to shake your hand and welcome you to their midst. A stranger never went hungry in Aroostook, no matter what the state of the potato crop. And that hospitality, as suited to fame as any in the United States, extends to the hotels. They give you a cheerful welcome, good food, good beds and service. Though small, they are modern, as befores hotels which are the headquarters for potato men from all over the East, who transact within the walls of these hotels millions of dollars worth of business.

Co-Operative Groups

Naturally folk who are warm-hearted and hospitable are co-operative in business and pleasure. The potato growers have their co-operative associations, and the young and old of Aroostook have their community club-houses, their community swimming pools. All of which is desirable and even necessary in an isolated country which could be an independent empire, self-sufficient in itself, except for its need to sell "spuds" to Boston New York, Philadelphia and the rest of the world.

If you would see Presque Isle and Aroostook at their gayest, come at the time of Presque Isle fair. It might be called the Mardi Gras of the North; actually it's the largest Maine fair, lasts a week and has a great deal of Mardi Gras spirit. On the final day there's the Grand Cavalcade, with every blue ribbon winner parading according to long-established custom. And in addition to those winners, Aroostook invites all and sundry who have anything unique to parade in the Presque Isle cavalcade. It may be a spectacular float, or just an old-time buckboard bedecked with streamers for the occasion, but it's in the cavalcade.

In fair time the Presque Isle hotel and rooming houses are jammed to capacity, the streets are packed with pedestrians and automobiles. It's a gay week for folk of all ages.

Right now Presque Isle and all Aroostook county is humming with activity. It's the busy time of the potato season. It's digging time. The county is now host to some 20,000 men, come here from all corners of New England and from farther points to harvest Aroostook's bumper crop of "spuds."

Trains Loaded

Now Caribou, largest city in Aroostook and the greatest potato shipping point in the world, is sending out train after train of table stock and certified seed potatoes.

If this potato year proves to be as successful as many here expect it to be, Aroostook will be well out of the depression, and the next 12 months in this spud empire will be as happy, as gay, as in any county in the nation. Next fall the fast trotters and pacers of pre-depression times will be back on the northern tracks, more "fine women" will go forth to schools and colleges and the Aroostook empire will live up to its listing as the home of "fast horses, fine women and free money."

25 TO BE FLOGGED FOR PRISON RIOT

New Toronto, Ont., Sept. 30—Strapping was ordered for 25 ring-leaders of a disturbance here Friday night at the Ontario brick and tile plant, part of the Ontario reformatory, following a night-long session of a board of inquiry.

Nearly 200 inmates threatened to riot and wreck the plant out of sympathy towards four men confined for their refusal to work.

As screams and shouts from the inmates filled the buildings guards sent for help from the New Toronto police department. The prisoners refused to go to bed until officials had heard a committee of men with their complaints.

WITH PEARS AT SEASON'S HEIGHT USE SHOULD BE MADE OF THEM

(By Edith M. Barber)

Pears with their delicate, but distinctive flavor are now approaching height of their season. We appreciate them more than ever this year with the scarcity of our nearby peach crop.

While nothing is better than a good eating pear, ripened just to the right point and then chilled in the refrigerator, next, in my opinion, is the stewed or baked pear which may have the addition of a few cloves if you like. This year you may also add a little brandy to your syrup after it has cooled, if you like, or you may prepare a really epicurean dessert—poires au rhum. For these I like to cook the pears with a tiny bit of water in a covered dish on top of the stove until they are just tender. I then put them into a chafing dish, sprinkle them well with granulated sugar and when I am ready to serve dessert I add a liberal amount of rum, set it on fire and baste the pears with the syrup which results. This can, of course be done at the table.

Another particularly good dessert may be made with either pears or peaches combined with ice cream and a fresh raspberry sauce. This method is known as "Melba". In this country sponge cake is often used for the foundation but abroad this usually omitted.

Perhaps you will like to spice or brandy some pears for winter use. I should mention that crabapples and plums spiced without removing their skins are also delicious to serve with meat.

GINGER PEARS

Dated at the City of Fredericton in the County of York aforesaid this 27th day of July, A.D. 1934.

THE UNIVERSITY OF NEW BRUNSWICK,
C. C. JONES, President,

3 pounds sugar
Select hard green pears and slice very thin. Scrape and cut the ginger root in tiny pieces and squeeze a little lemon juice over it. Cover the pears with the sugar and let them stand several hours. Place over a slow fire and let them simmer, add the ginger root and the juice, and grated rind of the lemons. When clear and very thick, remove from fire and put in hot clean jars. Seal.

PEARS ROMANOFF

6 Bartlett pears
3-4 cup sugar
3-4 cup water
1-2 cup thinly sliced oranges
1 cup heavy cream
Sugar
6 macaroons, crushed
Pare, halve and core the pears.

Make a syrup of the sugar, and water, add the pears and simmer until they are tender. Remove the halves of fruit to a serving dish. Add the sliced orange to the syrup and cook until slices are tender and the syrup is thick. Pour over the pears. Chill with whipped cream sweetened to taste and sprinkle over the crushed macaroons.

PEAR AMBER

5 firm pears
2 cups sugar
2 cups water
1 stick cinnamon
2 slices lemon
1 tablespoon gelatin
Salt
Pare, halve and core the pears.

Make a syrup with the sugar and water. Add the pears, cinnamon, lemon and salt and cook slowly until the pears are tender. Arrange pears in serving dish. To the hot syrup add the gelatin which has been soaking in a little cold water five minutes. Stir until dissolved and strain the mixture over the apples. Cool and then chill in the refrigerator until firm. Serve with boiled custard.

DUTCH CAKE

2 cups milk
6 tablespoons lard
3-4 cup sugar
1 yeast cake
1 teaspoon salt
6 1-2 cups flour
2 eggs
1-2 box raisins
Mix all ingredients together and let rise until double in bulk. Knead and put in greased pan and let rise again. Bake in moderate oven about 30 minutes.

HAM AND EGG SANDWICHES

Thin slices buttered bread
Hard-cooked egg
1 tablespoon minced ham to each egg
Have the eggs finely chopped or put them through a meat chopper, add the ham, dressing and seasoning and mix well. Spread the mixture on slices of buttered bread.

PICNIC SANDWICHES

Chop fine, ripe tomatoes, crisp cucumbers, hard-boiled eggs and pepper onion; season with salt and pepper and mix with mayonnaise. Place between thin slices of buttered bread.

WALDORF SANDWICHES

Tart apples
Celery
Mayonnaise
Lettuce
Sliced white bread
Put the celery and apples through food chopper, then mix with mayonnaise. Spread thickly on white bread. Put a crisp leaf of lettuce between the two slices, press firmly together. Cut in triangles.

29 YEARS AGO TODAY

(From the Files of The Daily Herald)

Talked Plainly

The principal speaker at the evening session of the Victoria Teachers' Institute at Grand Falls last week was Dr. Inch, chief Superintendent of Education and in his address he referred to the lamentable lack of school accommodation in Grand Falls. The doctor stated that the town should erect a ten thousand dollar school building and issue bonds for that purpose, payable in twenty-five years. Now more than two hundred and sixty-five children are crowded into a few small inadequate rooms, badly ventilated and averaging more than sixty pupils to a room.

Personal Mention

Mr. Gilmor Brown, C.E., spent Sunday with his family here, and returned to his work on the Central Railway contract this morning.

Mr. Thomas W. Smith returned on Saturday from a visit to Millville.
