Stomach Was Bad.

Could Eat Hardly Anything.

When the stomach gets out of order the whole system seems to become affected in one way or another. The breath becomes foul, the tongue furred, the appetite becomes disturbed, nausea and vomiting occur, there is a rising and souring of food caused by the acidity of the stomach, and the stomach and bowels become distended causing flatulency. Unless these symptoms are met with immediately, dyspepsia or some other serious trouble is liable to follow as a consequence.

That grand old remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters, has been on the market for the past forty years, and we claim, without any fear of contradiction, that there is not another medicine on the market to-day that can compare with it for the cure of all disturbances of the stomach.

Miss Lillian E. Phillips, Plumvessop, N.B., writes: "My stomach was so bad I was in pain and misery. I could eat hardly anything. I had been treated by skillful doctors for it, but they did me no good. I was giving up in despair when I happened to hear of Burdock Blood Bitters. You can't think how fast it helped me, for I had only taken two bottles before I was better. I will recommend your medicine very highly to all my friends and sufferers."

The Struggle At Bazeilles

A Story of the Franco-Prussian War.

At first Henrietta walked rapidly along the Balan road. It was hardly nine o'clock, but, as she got nearer the town, the sidewalk, bordered by houses and gardens, became gradually crowded with fleeing troops and citizens. At each new wave of the crowd she pressed closer to the walls and wormed her way through. Her slender black figure, her beautiful blonde head and small, pale face, half hidden in a head-dress of black lace, passed unnoticed. Her light and silent step never slackened.

At Balan a compact mass of men blocked the road. It was a regiment of marine infantry awaiting orders. They stood in the shade of great trees. She raised herself on her toes but could not see the last of them.

She shrank still more within herself in order to make her way between them. Chance elbows jostled her and she found herself brushing against the stocks of the soldiers' guns.

She had not gone twenty paces when cries and protestations struck her ear.

A captain, turning his head, called out angrily:

"Hey, there, woman, are you crazy? Where are you going?"
"I'm going to Bazeilles."
"To Bazeilles?"

Everybody laughed. The soldiers pointed at her mockingly.

The captain, chuckling, readdressed her:

"To Bazeilles, my girl! Take us with you. We were there a little while ago, and I hope we'll go back, but I warn you, it's a war spot."
"I am going to Bazeilles to see my husband," Henrietta declared in her sweet voice. Her pale blue eyes kept their look of quiet determination.

The men stopped laughing. An old sergeant made her turn back.

"My poor child," he said, "you see that it is impossible for you to go on. It is no Roman's job to go to Bazeilles now. You'll find your husband by and by. Come, now, be sensible."

She could but yield. She stood still and stood on her toes to look ahead, with straining eyes; still determined to continue on the way.

From the talk of the men about her she learned what had happened.

The officers were complaining bitterly about the order to retreat, by which they had been compelled to abandon Bazeilles at a quarter after eight, when General Ducrot, who had succeeded to the command, decided to concentrate all the troops on the plain ofilly.

The worst of it was that the first corps, having retreated too soon, left the Givonne valley to the Germans. The twelfth corps, while attacked in front, suffered a simultaneous assault on the left flank. Now that General de Wimpffen, succeeding General Ducrot, favored the earlier plan, orders were given to recapture Bazeilles, at no matter what cost, and force the Bavarians into the river Meuse.

What idocy it had been to abandon a position which now they must recover! They were willing to die, but not exactly for the fun of it.

Amid a great stir of men and horses, General de Wimpffen appeared. He stood in his stirrups, his face aflame, his words shrilling:

"Friends, we cannot retreat. That would be the end of everything. If we must retreat we shall go toward Carignan, and not toward Mezieres. You beat them this morning. You will beat them again."

He galloped away toward La Moncelle.

Henrietta had ceased to listen to the men's talk. She was eager to move ahead. She saw on the roadside, as if shipwrecked, a whole family of Bazeilles people. They were poor weavers—the husband, his wife and their three girls. The oldest girl had nine. They were so despondent, so exhausted with fatigue and despair, that they had fallen against a wall, unable to go farther.

"Ah, my poor woman," said the wife to Henrietta, "we have lost all. You know, our house was on the church plaza and a shell set it afire. I don't know how we and the children escaped with our lives."

At the recollection of the catastrophe the children began to sob and cry. The mother told the whole story in detail, accompanying her words with mad gestures.

"Good God Almighty!" the husband bemoaned, his eyes filled with big tears. "What will become of us?"

To calm them, Henrietta said simply, but tremulously:

"You are together, safe and sound, both of you, and you have your children. What have you to complain of?"

Then she questioned them. She wanted to know what had happened in Bazeilles, whether they had seen her husband and how her house was when they had quit Bazeilles. But in the panic of their fear their answers were contradictory. No, they had not seen M. Weiss. But one of the children cried that she had seen him, that he was on the sidewalk and that there was a big hole in the middle of his forehead.

The child's father gave her a slap to make her be silent; because, as he said, she was surely lying. As to the house, it was probably standing when they had taken flight; they even remembered to have remarked, in passing, that the door and the windows were carefully closed, as though not a soul was within. At that time, anyway, the Bavarians occupied only the church plaza. Of course, they must have made progress. All Bazeilles, without doubt, was now in flames.

(To be Continued.)

The man who quotes poetry is never asked to make an additional bore of himself by explaining what it means.

No doubt the wise old hen chuckled to herself every time she sees a man trying to beat her little game with an incubator.

FASHION'S NOVELTIES

ARE WORTH A REVIEW

House Coats and Picturesque Wrap Coats—Flimsy Underskirts Trimmed With Flowers.

To strike the happy medium in dress is a gift of the French woman of good breeding. She always knows just what to put on for the occasion, and is never led away by imagination. At present she is still smartly but severely clothed in cloth and fur.

But quite different in character is the new shaped fur cape seen here and there. It is short and round and perky but also warm and easy to wear. It reminds one of illustrations of "Cranford" when worn by a pretty woman.

A charming person had on a grey cloth dress trimmed with a band of chinchilla round the wide skirt, about two inches from the edge, and round the wrists two narrow bands of the same fur.

House Coat in Bolero Effect.

Another novelty of the season is the little house coat which can be made in any material and any color and can be worn over a "lingerie" front or a lace corsage. It is something like a bolero in cut but it does not limit itself to strictly bolero lines; sometimes it does not reach the waist by two or three inches, sometimes it passes the line by four or five.

For busy women who want something easy to slip on for tea this little coat is invaluable. These little coats have long sleeves and fasten down the front and they make no pretence at fitting, though their easy air is by no means untidy.

Picturesque Wrap Coats.

The wrap coat seen this week was a delightful affair—warm, picturesque, practical and so becoming. The material was dark raspberry red velours de laine, with collar and cuffs of white hare.

The special charm of this coat lay in the fact that it might be worn as a winter costume or a wrap-coat. The design was so uncommon that the whole thing looked like a dress or original outline.

The way in which the fronts of the coat were manipulated is worthy of attention. There was a large rounded flap which crossed the bust, hiding the centre fastening, and which was then buttoned under the arm at one side.

Wrap-coats of a picturesque order are more popular than ever this winter. The redingote of velvet thrown back from a frilled apron, the Watteau back, the very flounces themselves, all remind one of the crisp elegance of Mme de Pompadour, and the many favorites of the two Louis.

Underskirts Trimmed with Flowers.

The frilled petticoat and its trimmings of rosettes and flowers is seen, for which such clever fingers and such graceful imaginations are necessary. The most exquisite flimsy underskirts are made of crepe de chine, net, mousseline and fine silks generally.

With their flounces, lops of ribbon and bunches of flowers, they are most desirable, and every woman is stocking her wardrobe with suitable ones for different occasions. Stockings and shoes are in keeping. A smart dress and an untidy shoe always look badly—and are becoming quite impossible.

PINK THE COLOR OF THE DAY

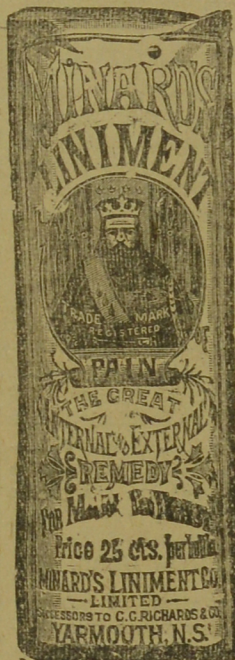

Pink in the form of flowers is much used on spring hats.

In sports clothes pink is important. There are many charming blouses of Jersey silk striped in pink and white, with pink facings and collars.

One thing that shows just how popular pink is is the rows and rows of bottles of liquid or powder to color water in which pink things are to be washed. Pink liquid or powder is it, and it is added to the rinsing water.

Geranium, petunia, orchid red and other shades with much of the resilience that makes pink becoming are among the newest colors. And then there are the rose shades we have worn all winter and much of the shade that generally goes by the name pink.

It has been said that a French woman knows enough to run her lingerie with pink ribbons. For she, wise woman, knows that there is charming softness about pink that is found in no other color.
