"SANFORD QUEST, CRIMINOLOGIST."

The young man from the West had arrived in New York only that afternoon, and his cousin, town born and bred, had already embarked upon the task of showing him the great city.
They occupied a table in a somewhat insignificant corner of one of New York's most famous roof garden restaurants. The place was crowded with diners. There were many nota-bilities to be pointed out. The town young man was very busy.

"Tell me," the country cousin inquired, "who is the man at a table by himself? The waiters speak to him as though he were a little god. Is he a millionaire, or a judge, or what?"

"You're in luck, Alfred," the New Yorker declared. "That's the most interesting man in New York—one of the most interesting in the world.
That's Sanford Quest."

"Who's he?"
"Sanford Quest is the greatest master in criminology the world has ever known. He is a magician, a scientist, the Pierpont Morgan of his profession."

"Say, do you mean that he is a detective?"

"Yes," he said simply, "you can call him that—just in the same way that you could call Napoleon a soldier or Lincoln a statesman. He is a detective, if you like to call him that, the master detective in the world."

When Sanford Quest entered his house an hour later he glanced into two of the rooms on the ground floor, in which telegraph and telephone operators sat at their instruments. Then, by means of a small lift, he ascended to the top story and entered a large apartment wrapped in gloom until, as he crossed the threshold, he touched the switches of the electric lights. One realized then that this was a man of taste. Quest drew up an easy chair to the wide-flung window, touching a bell as he crossed the room. In a few moments the door was opened and closed noiselessly. A young woman entered with a bundle of papers.

The criminologist glanced through the papers quickly. "No further inquiries, Laura?"

She left the room almost noiselessly.

"THE TENEMENT HOUSE MYSTERY."

CHAPTER I.

"This habit of becoming late for breakfast," Lady Ashleigh remarked, as she sat down the coffee pot, "is growing upon your father. Any news, dear?"

Ella glanced up from a pile of correspondence through which she had been looking a little negligently.

"None at all, mother. My correspondence is just the usual sort of rubbish—invitations and gossip. Such a lot of invitations, by the bye."

"At your age," Lady Ashleigh declared, "that is the sort of correspondence which you should find interesting."

"You know I am not like that, mother," she protested. "My music is really the only part of life which absolutely appeals to me. Oh, why doesn't Delarey make up his mind and let father know, as he promised! . . . Here comes daddy, mum."

Lord Ashleigh loitered for a moment to raise the covers from the dishes upon a side table. Afterwards he seated himself at the table.

"I heard this morning," he said, "from your friend Delahey, Ella. He went into the matter very fully. The substance of it is that for the first year of your musical training he advises New York."

"I have not finished yet. This cablegram," he went on, drawing a little slip of blue paper from his pocket, "was brought to me this morning—"

He smoothed it out before him and read:

To Lord Ashleigh, Hamblin House, Dorset, England: I find a magnificent program arranged for at Metropolitan Opera house this year. Have taken box for your daughter, engaged the best professor in the world, and secured an apartment at the Leland, our most select and comfortable residential hotel. Understand your brother is still in South America, returning early spring, but will do our best to make your daughter's year of study as pleasant as possible. Advise her sail on Saturday by Mauretania.

"On Saturday?" Ella almost screamed.

"I shall now," Lord Ashleigh said,
"leave you to talk over and discuss this matter for the rest of the day.
At dinner time tonight you can tell me your decision, or rather we will discuss it together."

CHAPTER II.

"I am to take it, I believe," Lord Ashleigh began after dinner that evening, "that you have finally decided, Ella, to embrace our friend Delahey's suggestion and to leave us Saturday?"

"If you please," Ella murmured, with glowing eyes.

RECIPES WORTH TRYING.

It is amazing how youngsters (and sometimes grown-ups) will eat potato and onion soup when they are extremely disdainful to those humble vegetables in other forms.

These soups are hearty and may readily serve for the main luncheon dish on a hot day, and topped off with a bowl of fresh or stewed fruit will constitute an ideal meal as regards food values.

"Thick Potato Soup—First cut up in small pieces three thin slices of bacon, slice very thin one medium sized onion and cook in the bacon fat. Do not let it brown very much. Pare and cut up into dice four or five medium-sized potatoes and place the bacon together with the onion and fat and the potatoes, in a kettle add one quart of boiling water. Let this cook very gently until the potato is thoroughly done. Add a pint of milk. Cream together two tablespoonfuls of butter, and two level tablespoonfuls of flour and add to the kettle of soup. This will make the contents of the kettle rich and creamy. Over the top before serving scatter a generous supply of well buttered croutons, and sprinkle with the finely chopped tender yellow leaves of celery.

"Thick Cream of Onion Soup—Onions are so desirable as a food, especially for children, that we should use them more in every possible way. Chop finely four medium-sized onions and put them over the fire with three cupfuls of cold water and a very little salt.

Cook them until they are sufficiently tender to put through a sieve. Add the pulp and liquor left from the onion to one pint of cream sauce. Stir very carefully together and heat slowly for five or ten minutes. Just before serving sprinkle the top with finely chopped parsley."

Yellow Cake—Five egg yolks, 1 cup of sugar, 1 cup milk, 1 cup of butter, 1 teaspoonful of lemon extract and 2 teaspoonfuls of baking powder sifted in two cups of flour.
Cream sugar, butter and eggs, add milk and extract, and last flour and baking powder. Bake in 3 layers 20 minutes or until it won't stick to a toothpick. Very good with lemon filling.

Eggless, Milkless, Butterless Cake
One cup brown sugar, 1 cup seedless raisins, 1 cup water, 1-3 teaspoon cloves. Boil three minutes together. When cool add 1 teaspoon soda dissolved in warm water, 2 cups flour, 1-2 teaspoon baking powder, 1 cup black walnut kernels.
Beat thoroughly; bake in loaf 40 minutes or until done. This cake is eggless, milkless and butterless but is delicious.

Raisin Pie—One cup sugar, 1 egg, 1 cup cold water, 1 cup chopped raisins, 1 tablespoon cornstarch, grated rind and juice of 1 lemon, a little butter and salt.
