"Stolen!" Mrs. Rheinholdt shrieked.

Mrs. Rheinholdt breathed a sigh of relief as she greeted her new arrivals.

The professor made himself universally agreeable in a mild way, and his presence created even more than the sensation which Mrs. Rheinholdt had hoped for. In her desire to show him ample honor she seldom left his side.

"I am going to take you into my husband's study," she suggested, later on in the evening. "He has some specimens of beetles."

"Beetles," the professor declared, with some excitement, "occupied precisely two months of my time while abroad. By all means, Mrs. Rheinholdt!"

"We shall have to go quite to the back of the house," she explained, as she led him along the darkened passages.

The professor smiled acquiescently.
His eyes rested for a moment upon her necklace.

"You must really permit me, Mrs.
Rheinholdt," he exclaimed, "to admire your wonderful stones. I am a judge of diamonds, and those three or four in the center are, I should judge, unique."

She held them out to him. The professor laid the end of the necklace gently in the palm of his hand and examined them through a horn-rimmed eyeglass.

"They are wonderful," he murmured.
"Wonderful! Why?"

He turned away a little abruptly.
They had reached the back of the house and a door from outside had just been opened. A man had crossed the threshold with a coat over his arm and was standing now looking at them.

"How extraordinary!" the professor remarked. "Is that you, Craig?"

"Yes, sir," he replied. "There is a rainstorm, so I ventured to bring your mackintosh."

"Very thoughtful," the professor murmured approvingly. "I have a weakness," he went on, turning to his hostess, "for always walking home after an evening like this. In the daytime I am content to ride. At night I have the fancy always to walk."

"We don't walk half enough," Mrs.
Rheinholdt sighed, glancing down at her somewhat portly figure. "Dixon," she added, turning to the footman who had admitted Craig, "take Professor Ashleigh's servant into the kitchen and see that he has something before he leaves for home. Now, professor, if you will come this way."

They reached a little room in the far corner of the house. Mrs. Rheinholdt apologized as she switched on the electric lights.

"It is a queer little place to bring you to," she said, "but my husband used to spend many hours here, and he would never allow anything to be moved. You see, the specimens are in these cases."

The professor nodded. His general attitude toward the forthcoming exhibition was merely one of politeness.
As the first case opened, however, his manner completely changed. Without taking the slightest further notice of his hostess, he adjusted a pair of horn rimmed spectacles and commenced to mumble eagerly to himself. Mrs.
Rheinholdt, who did not understand a word, strolled around the apartment, yawned and finally interrupted a little stream of eulogies, not a word of which she understood, concerning a green beetle with yellow spots.

"I am so glad you are interested, professor," she said. "If you don't mind, I will rejoin my guests. You will find a shorter way back if you keep along the passage straight ahead

"Stolen There in the Conservatory!"

and come through the conservatory.

"Certainly! With pleasure!" the professor agreed, without glancing up.

Mrs. Rheinholdt's reception, notwithstanding the temporary absence of its presiding spirit, was without doubt an unqualified success. In one of the distant rooms the younger people were dancing. Philip Rheinholdt, with a pretty young debutante upon his arm, came out from the dancing room and looked around amongst the little knots of people.

"I wonder where mother is?" he remarked. "She told me—"

The young man broke off in the middle of his sentence. He, too, like many others in the room, felt a sudden thrill almost of horror at the sound which rang without warning upon their ears—a woman's cry, a cry of fear and horror. Mrs. Rheinholdt, her hands clasping her neck, her splendid composure a thing of the past, a panic-stricken, terrified woman, stumbled into the room. She seemed on the point of collapse.
Somehow or other, they got her into an easy chair.

"My jewels!" she cried. "My diamonds!"

"What do you mean, mother?" Philip Rheinholdt asked quickly. "Have you lost them?"

"Stolen!" Mrs. Rheinholdt shrieked.

They gazed at her open-mouthed, incredulous. Then a still, quiet voice from the outside of the little circle intervened.

"Instruct your servants, Mr. Rheinholdt, to lock and bar all the doors of the house," the professor suggested.
"No one must leave it until we have heard your mother's story."

"I had just taken the professor into the little room my husband used to call the museum," Mrs. Rheinholdt explained, her voice still shaking with agitation. "I left him there to examine some specimens of beetles. I thought that I would come back through the conservatory, which is the quickest way. I was about half way across it when suddenly I heard

WOMAN'S COLUMN

FASHION JOTTINGS.

Plaid and figured materials are being used to trim sport skirts. Often they are set in as contrasting panels or godet flares.

White hats are coming in fast.
They range from the white chiffon hat for motoring to the fluffy combinations of velvet and hemp or dimity and ostrich.

Long limb handbags are not mounted on a stiff frame, but is strung on cords with rings.

A basket of wall flowers worked on buckram and cut out as if on cardboard is posed directly on the front of a large leghorn hat.

Bathing suits are being trimmed with goldfine.

A decided absence of decollete is observed in new evening gowns.
A V front will show a high collar back, or the entire decolletage may be veiled to the straight-shoulder line.

THE NEW "JUMPER CORSAGE."

Paris dressmakers are clever at designing little "nothings" which give a cachet to an otherwise insignificant gown, for example, a delightful "little nothing" made of supple taffetas, which could be worn over any summer blouse and which is as decorative as a picturesque coatee, this novelty may be called a "jumper corsage" for want of a better name. A model was made of fuschia-pink taffetas and the borders were hemstitched by machine. The little garment buttoned invisibly at the back under the crossed folds of the taffetas, which formed a sort of sash when drawn forward and passed through a large jet buckle.

A "jumper-corsage" of this order might be made in any bright colored taffetas, or of soft satin or any other material or successfully copied in natural bleige Tuseore silk and worn over a blouse made of ivory white cotton voile.

TIPS FROM THE GARDENER.

While nasturtiums are pretty nearly trouble proof, they sometimes fall victims to the black louse or aphid in warm weather.
The best remedy for these pests is a nicotine remedy sold by seedsmen. Only a little will be needed, for it is to be diluted with water.
It is easily applied with a little tin spray pump, but care must be taken to get in on the under part of the leaves. Nasturtiums will grow in partly shaded spots, but will have more leaves than blossoms.
This will be the result, too, if the ground is very rich.
