Could Not Stand The Least Excitement.

Was So Weak and Run Down.

Many women become run down and worn out by their household cares and duties never ending, and sooner or later find themselves with shattered nerves and weak hearts.

When the heart becomes weak, and the nerves unstrung, it is impossible for a woman to look after her household or social duties. The least little exertion or excitement leaves her in an exhausted condition, and not fit to do anything.

On the first sign of any weakness of the heart or nerves, you will be wise if you start to take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

This remedy will act directly on the disordered heart making it beat strong and regular, and will also invigorate and strengthen the nerves so as to make them steady and firm.

Mrs. J. A. Williams, Tillsonburg, Ont., writes: "I cannot speak too highly of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I suffered greatly with my nerves. I was so weak and run down, I could not stand the least excitement of any kind. I believe your Heart and Nerve Pills to be a valuable remedy for all sufferers from nervous trouble."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are the original remedy for all heart and nervous troubles. Price 50 cents per box.
3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

"You don't look well," he said.
"You look pale and nervous and not at all like yourself."

"My dear Jack," she smiled, "there is nothing at all the matter with me."

"I am worried about you, nevertheless. You ought to have told me the truth about this hospital business at first, instead of trying to conceal it from me. Doctor Sterling is coming here this morning and I shall have him examine you."

"Doctor Sterling!" exclaimed Gertrude.

"Yes. He is to call for me at eleven. We were going for a walk."

"Well, you can go for a walk," broke in Gertrude, "and walk as far as you please, but Doctor Sterling shall not examine me"—this with firmness. "Besides, I sha' be out at eleven. I am going to church."

At any other time this announcement would have been greeted with roars of laughter, for Mrs. Gray had not been to church for years—a matter which had been a source of many arguments between her and Timothy.
But now her statement was received with amazement and all her family insisted that she must not go to church, lest she endanger the health of the congregation. Even Timothy said he would forego church that day on the mere chance of having caught a stray microbe from Gertrude, and then he suggested that perhaps he and Phyllis had better retire to another room, where they would be perfectly secure from infection.

After the departure of the younger couple, there was a brief silence, during which Jack seemed to be nerving himself for some further conversation. He coughed a couple of times, looked out of the window as if for inspiration and finally went over and sat on the arm of his wife's chair.

"There's another thing I want to speak to you about, dear," he began.
"I was waiting for Timothy and Phyllis to get out."

"Well?" she returned inquiringly.
"Of course I know it's all right," he stammered along, "but I want you to tell me about it."

"Why all these prefatory remarks?" asked Gertrude, who was not quite sure what was coming next.

For answer he thrust his hand into his coat pocket and brought out the comb that had once belonged to the Countess Francesca.

"Why, that's my comb!" she exclaimed, with apparent delight, but with a sinking heart, and her little head was busy for a few seconds formulating a plausible story. "Where did you find it, Jack?"

"I found it in a man's room," he seriously replied.

"Really!" said Gertrude, with welleigned surprise.

"Can you tell me how I got it there?" he asked.

"In a man's room?" repeated his wife reflectively.

"Exactly."

"Was the man's name Townsend?" ventured Mrs. Gray, with a little puzzled frown.

"Yes," said Jack firmly. "I found your comb in Harry Townsend's room. You seem to know something about this. Please tell me."

"Well, Jack," she began hesitatingly, "I will tell you. That is, I'll tell you all I know—if you'll promise not to get angry."

"I am not in the habit of getting angry," said her husband, in a tone of severe self-righteousness, "unless there is cause for it."

Gertrude chuckled.

"I was afraid," said she, "that you might disapprove of my leading this comb to any one."

"Lending it?"

"You see," she continued glibly, "yesterday afternoon, just as I got to Mabel's private room in the hospital, her nurse was going out. She was all dressed up in her best high-tucker and pinking before Mabel's mirror and she was having a strenuous time with her hair. So I sailed in and arranged her hair for her and stuck in my comb. It looked so well on her that I told her she could wear it and give it back to Mabel for me later."

"A careful person to lend things to!" grunted Jack, looking at the comb.

"After the nurse went out," Gertrude continued, "Mabel told me she was very much excited because she was going to take luncheon with a man—a Mr. Townsend."

"That's where you heard the name," commented Jack.

"Yes, but of course I had no idea the nurse was going to his apartments."

"She lunched with him in his rooms. I dropped in there later and you may imagine my surprise when I saw your comb on the table and heard that a woman had been there."

"You thought it was I?" smiled Gertrude mischievously.

"No, I didn't really think it was you. But I didn't know exactly what to think," explained Jack frankly. "What kind of a looking girl is this nurse?"

"A rather good looking girl," said Gertrude, with becoming modesty.
"About medium height, dark."

"That answers the description," agreed Jack. "And what's her name?"

"Oh—er," stammered Gertrude.
"Ah—er—Miss—Miss Phoenix, I think."

"That's it!" cried Jack, rising.
"That's the name. I couldn't remember it."

And then he kissed his wife and asked her forgiveness and begged her not to go to church and announced that he was going upstairs to shave and dress preparatory to his walk with Doctor Sterling.

Woman's Column.

HOUSEKEEPER'S ALMANAC.

The cellar, of course, cannot be thoroughly cleaned until the furnace fire is allowed to go out for the season, but it can be cleared of all rubbish, if rubbish has been allowed to accumulate there during the winter.
The cellar should be the most orderly part of the house, partly because an accumulation of rubbish there increases danger of fire and partly because the air from the cellar rises through the house, carrying with it dust or any other uncleanliness.

Remember, that spring appetites crave fresh things, and that salads tempt when heavier foods repel. Vegetable salads for luncheon are admirable on spring days.

If the spring days drag, begin to plan for summer vacations. Send for catalogues and pamphlets of hotel rates and take out some of your longing
spring days.

See to it that all the chimneys are in good condition that all fireplaces are ready for a little extra work. The spring days after the furnace fire is put out are the days when open fires are most in demand.

If you have a little extra money—of course you have—and desire to spend it, invest it in something to make the fireside more attractive—a toasting fork, a new set of andirons or a comfortable fireside chair.

TRANSPARENT COLLAR.

Among the many little things of dress to be seen in connection with spring novelties let us speak first of a "trifle light as air" in the shape of a transparent collar which may be said to be very becoming.

The collar is of the Medici persuasion and made of gauze in a suitable shade of helio-trope. The collar is quite transparent though two thickness-es of gauze are introduced.

Slender supports, as fine as horsehair, are introduced here and there between the two pieces of gauze and the top of the collar is finished with a picot edge.

It must be confessed that these collars are very fragile, but they are effective when worn with a navy blue costume.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

Ridicule never kills unless death is deserved.

Only a fool goose would undertake to lay golden eggs.

The almighty dollar covers a multitude of queer transactions.

Usually the man who shakes the tree gets the least fruit.

A woman's idea of a good husband is one who does things for her folks.

The thing that worries a rich man is that some of his friends are even richer.

A spinster who is willing but unable to catch on thinks marriage is a failure.

Many a woman firmly believes what is to be will be—and that it will be the fault of her husband.
