She Coughed Day and Night.

Mrs. Fred. Feares, Cedarville, Ont., writes: "I am sending you this letter telling what Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup did for me. Ten years ago I had a terrible cold. For days I could not speak above a whisper. I coughed day and night. One evening I was so bad I went down to our storekeeper, and when I went in he said, 'You better get something done for that cold of yours.' I told him, as well as I could, that I had just come to get a bottle of the best cough medicine he had. He told me Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup was the best he had, and said for me to take a little of it before I left the store. I took some, and in fifteen minutes I could speak as well as ever. I think 'Dr. Wood's' is the very best on the market."

That persistent cough must be gotten rid of immediately, for if it hangs on to you it may develop into some serious lung trouble, such as bronchitis, pneumonia and perhaps consumption.

Get rid of it by using Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. A remedy that has been on the market for twenty-five years. A remedy that cures when all others fail.

When you ask for "Dr. Wood's" see that you get what you ask for as there are many imitations on the market.

"Dr. Wood's" is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price, 25c and 50c.

Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Helping Hersey

BY BARONESS VON HUTTEN

Author of "Pam," "Kingmead," "The Black Patch," etc

"Yes, you are the only real dyed-in-the-wool Uncle Sam I've ever seen—I mean, Uncle Jonathan."

"Brother Jonathan," corrected Barnes, not smiling.

Then came the bad coffee and as he stirred his Cox burst out.

"I say, I ought to like Americans. I'm going to marry one."

"Are you?"

Barnes watched the waster with grave delight as that worthy asked Cox if there was anything else and then turned his attention to his host's announcement.

"Are you to be married soon?"

"As soon as I can count on five hundred pounds a year. In about six months, I should say. I've been promised a rise and I'm doing pretty well. Here's her picture."

Barnes held the little locket for a moment, without opening it. It offended something in him that a man should show his sweetheart's picture to a perfect stranger, in a restaurant. But Cox, he told himself, was Cox.

He opened the locket.

"By George!" he said.

Cox laughed aloud.

"I thought she's surprise you. Even better than that, too, in real life. Her coloring is glorious."

"She is most beautiful," agreed Barnes heartily, returning the trinket.

"And the greatest darling in the world."

Cox's good-looking face glowed with something that seemed to melt his slight vulgarity and show better things behind.

"Mrs. Frewen must have been a beauty, too," the young man went on, "but nothing compared to her daughter."

"Mrs.—who?"

Barnes's voice was suddenly sharp.

"Frewen—that's their name."

"Oh! Oh, can you tell me her Christian name?"

"Can I? Of course I can. It's Hersey. A quaint name, isn't it? Suits her, however."

Barnes drew a sigh of relief.

"A pretty name. I never heard it before. For a moment I thought it might be some one I used to know. Americans, too, but her name was—different."

"I see."

Cox lit a cigar and offered one to his guest. Then he said, leaning back in his corner:

"They may be the same people. There is some mystery about the mother—I don't know what, and I don't care. It happened years ago—out west somewhere. I believe Frewen was her second husband."

Barnes looked at his cigar.

"No, the lady I was thinking of was named Violet."

"Exactly well, so is her's—Hersey's mother, I mean to say. Oh, you thought the daughter's name was Violet?"

"Yes. I—I hope things are well with Mrs. Frewen?"

There was a little vertical line between Barnes's eyes as he spoke. He looked what he was, ill at ease.

Cox shook his head.

"None too well. They live in a boarding house in Bloomsbury and I fancy they are pretty hard up. I suppose they were swells in your day?"

"Yes, I suppose they were."

"I thought so."

"They are now," the young man concluded gaily, "as you can see—or she would not be engaged to me."

"Does Violet—Mrs. Frewen—approve of the engagement?" asked Barnes, unable to resist putting the question.

"Oh, yes; she seems to like me well enough, though you see, my father is a saddler in Derby."

He said it simply—what Barnes called to himself "nicely."

Nevertheless, when he was on his way back to his hotel, Barnes was conscious of a feeling of distress. Violet Barston's daughter should not have married the son of a Derby saddler.

II

Barnes had made no plan to see Cox again. The whole thing had been the outcome of one of the sudden impulses that, as he grew older, taunted him some surprise in his contemplation of his own character. Why he, Michael Barnes, should have hobnobbed with a youthful reporter who had more than a streak of vulgarity in him, it was difficult to say. He had been lonely, and Cox was attractive. These were the real reasons, but they seemed insufficient as he reflected on the matter.

And he had liked Cox for not urging a further meeting on him. There are, he mused, dozens of kinds of vulgarity, and the buoyant reporter's kind was singularly offensive.

"There may be a gentleman inside him, somewhere," he concluded, as he switched off his light, "but as he is an Englishman he'll go to his grave without suspecting it."

During the next few days Barnes settled the business that had been one of his reasons for coming to London, and conscientiously "saw the sights," many of them, for the first time. He spent a morning at the Tower, an afternoon in the Abbey, which, like so many Americans, he loved, and one sunny morning, drove to Chelsea and "went over" the Carlyle house reverently, although Carlyle's style had always bored him.

-Woman's Column:-

NOTES OF FASHION.

The one-piece frock is an established favorite this spring. A model is carried out in monsoon-grey taffeta and chiffon, with glimpses of embroidery in steel and dull Indian colors to brighten the whole.

The sleeves unite the two materials, and are very pretty, with the taffeta cuff extended to a puff at the back and the rest merged into the Magyear blouse which is seen beneath the taffeta plastron.

A back fastening is arranged for this dress beneath a plastron which matches the one in front, except that it is finished at the waist with a threeeing of embroidery and a flat bow and short ends in the centre.

Quite a feature of the new demitailed suits is the mixture of two materials for one suit, and the idea has merit on the score of economy since with one coat can be worn two frocks or more.

Some pretty suits seen the other day accounted for serge and crepe de Chine. The frock in one case was made of serge and the coat of crepe de Chine, and to the coat appertained a sash with a fussily wired bow at the back.

The "stand-off" coat is established, and when it is not an exaggerated affair, has a decided attraction. Really charming is a coat with frills on the hips and a plain panel both back and front: it has the feminine prettiness of a pannier frock and yet can be arranged in taffeta or soft serge.

Covert coasing is being used again, and alpaca and hopsack position, the result, it may be supposed, of the necessity for using just whatsoever fabrics can be obtained

Many of the new skirts are roped at the hem to make them stand out a little and "swing" in movement, and some of the new coats require support of the same kind.

Your jacket should be as long as is becoming to you.

Big black insects are the sole trimming of many of the new hats. Lingerie with a touch of Chinese embroidery is new and very rich.

Ribbon is used as a trimming on voiles, marisettes and chiffon frocks.

White canvas pumps will be the correct shoe to wear with lingerie dresses.

Wide flat collars the size of small shoulder capes finish new frocks at the neck.

Raincoats are absolutely plain, unless their belts can be reckoned as ornaments.

Some plain tailored suits have nothing but cordings around their waist for trimming.

HOW TO CONTROL NERVOUSNESS AND REMOVE DEPRESSION

If you are constantly keyed up, nervous, perhaps depressed—look at your over-worked nerves for the cause. They are starving for the nourishment that Ferrozone so quickly supplies. Besides its tonic action on the nervous system, Ferrozone has marvellous blood-forming properties. It thus supplies strengthening materials to every nook and corner of the body and brings the system to a condition of perfect health. To be strong, to eat well and work along without fatigue, use Ferrozone: it is the best nerve system tonic known. At all dealers in 50c. boxes.

A man always remembers the first kiss longest—a woman the last; because that's the one each of them had the most trouble in getting.
