with her diamond. LOOK again. She lies there dead! Who was it entered the room, Lenora? Look! Look!
Gaze into that mirror. What do you see there?

The girl's eyes had opened. They were fixed now upon the mirror—distended, full of unholy things.

"Try harder, Lenora," he muttered, his own breath laboring. "It is there in your brain! Look!"

For a single second the smooth surface of the mirror was obscured. A room crept dimly like a picture into being, a fire upon the hearth, a girl leaning back in her chair. A door in the background opened. A man stole out. He crept nearer to the girl —his eyes fixed upon the diamonds, a thin, silken cord twisted round his wrist. Suddenly she saw him—too late! His hand was upon her lips, his face seemed to start almost from the mirror—then blackness!

Lenora opened her eyes. She was still in the easy-chair before the fire.

"Mr. Quest!" she faltered.

He looked up from some letters which he had been studying.

"I am so sorry," he said politely. "I really had forgotten that you were here. But you know—that you have been to sleep?"

"Can I go now?" she asked.

"Certainly," Quest replied. "To tell you the truth, I find that I shall not need to ask you those questions, after all. A messenger from the police station to the spider's web!

"Any chance of getting out?" Quest asked laconically.

"None!" was the bitter reply.

"You've done enough mischief. You're there to rot!"

"Why this animus against me, my friend Macdougall?" Quest demanded.

"You and I have never come up against one another before. I didn't like the life you led in New York ten years ago, or your friends, but you've suffered nothing through me."

"I let you go," once more came the man's voice. "I know very well in what chair I shall be sitting before a month has passed. I am James Macdougall, Mr. Sanford Quest, and I have got the Ashleigh diamonds, and I have settled an old grudge, if not of my own, of one greater than you. That's all a pleasant night to you!"

The door went down with a bang.

"A perfect oubliette," he remarked to himself, as he held a match over his head a moment or two later, "built for the purpose. It must be the house we failed to find which Bill Taylor used to keep before he was shot."

Smooth brick walls, smooth brick floor, only exit twelve feet above one's head.
Human means, apparently, are useless.
Science, you have been my mistress all my days. You must save my life now or lose an earnest disciple.

Quest felt in his overcoat pocket and drew out the small, hard pellet.

He gripped it in his fingers and "What About the Young Woman?" the Inspector Asked.

tion has been here. He says they have come to the conclusion that a very well-known gang of New York criminals are in this thing. We know how to track them down all right."

"I may go now, then?" she repeated, with immense relief.

Quest escorted the girl downstairs, opened the front door, blew his whistle and his car pulled up at the door.

"Take this young lady," he ordered, "wherever she wishes. Good-night!"

The girl drove off. Quest watched the car disappear around the corner.

Then he turned slowly and made preparations for his adventure.

"Number 700, New York," he muttered, half an hour later, as he left his house. "Beyond Fourteenth street —a tough neighborhood."

He hesitated for a moment, feeling the articles in his overcoat pocket—a revolver in one, a small piece of hard substance in the other. Then he stepped into his car, which had just returned.

"Where did you leave the young lady?" he asked the chauffeur.

"In Broadway, sir. She left me and boarded a cross-town car."

Quest nodded approvingly.

"No finesse," he sighed.

CHAPTER V.

Sanford Quest was naturally a person unaffected by presentiments or nervous fears of any sort, yet, having advanced a couple of yards along the hallway of the house which he had just entered without difficulty, he came to a standstill, oppressed with the sense of impending danger.

"Anyone here?" he asked, raising his voice.

There was no direct response, yet from somewhere upstairs he heard the half-smothered cry of a woman. He gripped his revolver in his fingers. He took a quick step forward. The floor gave way beneath him. He was falling into blackness.

The fall itself was scarcely a dozen feet. He picked himself up, his shoulder bruised, his head swimming a little. Suddenly a gleam of light shone down. A trap-door above his head was slid a few inches back. The flare of an electric torch shone upon his face, a man's voice addressed him.

"Not the great Sanford Quest? This surely cannot be the greatest detective in the world walking so easily in

Woman's Column

THE LURE OF LARGE HATS.

Almost all women are heartily glad that larger hats are the fashion. There is a mysterious allure about the big shady hat which softens the face that is wonderfully softening and becoming. To young faces the new hats which curve down deeply at each side make really bewitching frames, especially when they are of some dark color and lined underneath the brim with some soft and delicate tint such as egg-shell blue, oyster pink or the pale putty that has proved so valuable for the purpose. Never has there been such a catholicity of choice as this spring.
For, according to your requirements and what becomes you best, you can have the close fitting toque, the tall, practically brimless hat of Cossack fame, surmounted by a cockade or a chou of ribbon; the dainty drooping Watteau or Dolly Varden, the charming and less exacting bell shape, or the great "cart wheel," always dear to the feminine heart—and head.

TIPS FROM THE GARDENER.

It is well to grow some late flowering perennials in front of the peonies, or to sow annuals, as the peony plants may look rather ragged and unkempt toward the end of the season. The fall asters or the hardy chrysanthemums, or perhaps late phlox, will be found good flowers for a screen. Sometimes it is necessary to stake peonies if they are exposed to high winds, and they require plenty of water to the end of the summer.

Many of the perennials will produce their flowers over a much longer season if the blossoms are removed as fast as they fade. Lark
