CANADA MUST BE PREPARED FOR ANY SACRIFICE

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Premier Borden and Dr. Michael Clark Contribute Able Speeches to the Debate on the Address.

BOTH PARTIES ARE OPPOSED TO CONSCRIPTION

Turmoil and Strife of an Election Campaign Must be Avoided During the War--Government at Last Correctly Interprets Mind of the Country.

Ottawa, Jan. 17--War has sobered parliament. It was a serious, but confident and, at times, enthusiastic House which today heard the two leaders voice Canada's determination to assume greater responsibilities, and to make even greater sacrifices and efforts for the prosecution of the struggle to a victorious peace.

Both Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir Robert Borden opened by declaring that the shadows of the war seemed even darker and more sombre than when parliament had last met, yet they concluded with a firm and confident note of united endeavor to see the task through, cost what it might.

There was a compelling intensity in Sir Wilfrid's earnest and eloquent appeal for a united Canada, determined upon every sacrifice necessary to make victory complete and lasting.

Where heretofore he has alluded to the insular prejudices of the Bourassa-Lavergne element in his own province with ridicule, this afternoon he alluded to them with stinging scorn.

In every province of Canada, he maintained, the primary issue that "we must be free or lose our freedom" must be the dominant—the only—consideration. Sir Wilfrid went even further; there was not a civilized nation in the world that had not an interest in the outcome of the war. Germany's plans of domination were not confined to the old world.

"Should she triumph," declared the ex-premier significantly, "there will be nations that will rue the day of their indifference and supineness."

With war as the first consideration Sir Wilfrid did not even allude to the legislative item which the government has placed first on its program—the bill to extend the life of parliament. The discussion of that domestic issue can come after the war necessities have been met. In this respect Sir Robert Borden followed the lead of the opposition chief, as he did also in promptly accepting Sir Wilfrid's suggestion that he set at rest the feeling of uneasiness in many arts of the country that the voluntary system of enlistment, which has worked so well in Canada, should be abandoned for conscription. Sir Robert gave the pledge that there was no thought of conscription.

ALL RACES AND CREEDS READY.
The premier devoted most of his speech to a review of what had been done since parliament last met, noting the new call for the half million men and the ready response from all arts of the dominion "irrespective of party, race or creed."

He noted that during the present month the amount paid out in Canada for war munitions for Great Britain would be thirty-five million dollars and of this amount Canada was financing half. He intimated that Canada might assume an even larger share of the war financing burden of the motherland.

The only reference to the government's proposal to extend the life of parliament was made by Dr. Michael Clark, the eloquent Britisher from Red Deer, who followed the premier and wound up the debate for the day. Clark declared that it was desirable to avoid the turmoil and strife of an electoral campaign in Canada at this time. The government had at last correctly interpreted the mind of the country. Hon. Bob Rogers had discovered that "the electors were frothing at the mouth to hear the senate to pieces." Since then he was glad to learn that the minister of public works had learned that it had been something else other than the senate that the electors were so eager to tear to pieces so far as the minister's own province was concerned.

Mr. Rogers had evidently been convinced that "the ferocious fangs of the electors of Manitoba, at least, had been whetting themselves for different prey."

ELECTION A CALAMITY.

The turmoil of a general election at the present time, Dr. Clark maintained; the people of Canada were today united as never before on the great sacrifices and responsibilities of war.

"All over our dominion," declared the man from Red Deer, "the good women of Canada are knitting their eyes out, where they are not weeping them out."

He also urged that the government make a full and detailed statement as to what had been done and what was being done with the public money that parliament had voted for the use.

Dr. Clark stated that he did not bring these matters before the government to criticize but to assist in securing enlistment and public confidence and endorsement in the large expenditures being made.

Constantinople, Jan. 18, via London.—The Russian forces which recently began a general offensive in the Caucasus, are superior in numbers to the Turks opposing them, but according to the Constantinople War Office, effective resistance is being offered in Mesopotamia. The destruction of a British monitor near Shikhsaad, about 25 miles down the Tigris from Kut-el-Amara is the only incident reported.
