Fixing Things For Jimmy

Seven o'clock. Vaguely Jimmy heard a machine chortle below, then the sound of his sister's voice, and the fading exhaust as the automobile tore away into the distance. Hastily he rose. Just as hastily he dressed and ate breakfast. And in 15 minutes he was coaxing his somewhat ancient little roadster up the hill toward the Hotel Grande. And there on the veranda—right where he could see her the minute he made the curve, was Marion—waiting.

Some way Jimmy managed to maneuver himself through the rest of the day—a day with a picnic lunch and a drive and a lot of words that started nowhere and got nowhere, a lot of declarations that began but never were finished, a dreamy, hazy wonderful day in which he skidded around curves, talked of his automobile when he should have talked of more important things, in which he indulged in frivolities when he wanted terribly to be serious, and in which, at last, as they were within five miles of home, he managed to gain enough courage to say what he had been intending to say all day.

And just what she answered isn't important. It was important to Jimmy, because he was the most interested person. Anyway, the fact remains that a truck gardener, coming around a curve in the road, half jerked the bit from his horse's mouth as he steered his wagon clear of a wild eyed person who was trying to drive a machine with one hand on a mountain trail and hold a girl close to him with the other. Butas has been said before none of that was terribly important—and, even in the mind of Jimmy, there were other things which were of harrassing significance. Somewhere in the world his sister was with his only enemy, the man who had given him a black eye. And that man still stood capable of giving him further black eyes—the kind of black eyes that count.

"Golly" he murmured to himself, "I wonder how Sis is getting along with him?"

"What did you say, dear?" a sweet little voice queried.

Jimmy Reynolds looked hastily toward the girl at his side.

"Er—er—nothing," came his somewhat stilted answer. Only if you don't mind, I won't take you up to the hotel.
I'll leave you down at the corner—if —if you don't mind. I—father's coming in on the six-twenty and he'll—well, he'll want me to be there," he lied gloriously. "And its six-ten now. So if you don't mind—"

"Not at all."

And at six-fifteen Jimmy Reynolds was hammering on his sister's door.
A sunburned face greeted him—slightly smeared with cold cream.

"Get into your room and get cleaned up," Jane Reynolds ordered hastily.
"Mr. Blackburn's going to be here in a half hour and I don't want him to see you looking like that—at least not after all the talking I've done for you today."

"Did you fix things?" Jimmy was staring—wide-eyed.

"Well, goodness!" Jane made another dive for the cold cream jar. "I hope you didn't think I arranged your whole life for you, Jimmy. I told him that I thought you were sorry and that you had met his sister and that you had realized that a man with a sister like that must be as far superior to him as diamonds are to ashes and—"

"Gosh! You didn't lay it on at all!"

"What did you want?" asked Jane respectfully, "a reputation or Marion Blackburn?"

Jimmy grinned.

THE SITUATION
AT OTTAWA

Ottawa, June 27.—Political calculators who are figuring on the coming vote on the conscription referendum, put twenty-two Liberals against and twenty-one for the proposal of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

This calculation is outside of the Quebec members entirely. All of the French Liberals are down as supporting the referendum, along with five from Ontario, and scattered elements from the west and lower provinces.

Speakers on the list today include Messrs. Carvell, Edwards, Devlin, Sir Herbert Ames, Boulay and Gouveau.
