THE RHINELAND EVACUATION.

Before Christmas news despatches state all foreign troops will have left the soil of Germany and this information has been greeted with satisfaction in every country in the world. Those who have watched the course of European affairs see in this development the disappearance of one of the most troublesome aftermaths of the Great War.

No doubt it was necessary for the first few years after the Armistice to maintain an army of occupation in Germany. France demanded it and she was in the right in doing so but the time has long since past when it is necessary. Not only will a big sum be saved the taxpayers of Britain and France but it will be still another link forged in the lengthening chain of peace development.

The years have softened the intensity of feeling that once existed against Germany. War propaganda was necessarily exaggerated and now a fairer perspective has been developed. The belief still exists and it will probably exist for centuries that a certain group of German leaders and militarists who to a considerable extent controlled the Government were in the main responsible for the war. Not only were they without doubt a major factor in the outbreak but their sponsoring of a campaign of "frightfulness" and brutality will forever remain a hideous blot on the history of their country.

But today everyone recognizes that the great mass of Germans went to the trenches with the same high ideals of patriotism and duty that inspired our own fighting men and that it is manifestly unfair to blame them and an entire nation for the stupid and brutal policy of some of their leaders. For this reason and because Germany under its new controllers is making an honest and colossal effort to repair the errors of the past the news of the evacuation has been greeted with satisfaction.

A striking commentary of the folly of war and its inability to kill the kindness and comradeship born of propinquity is seen in the fact that hundreds of British and French soldiers during the years of occupation have taken unto themselves German wives and that no less than ten German towns have passed resolutions expressing their appreciation of the splendid conduct of the Allied troops during the occupational period.

Someone says the hay fever victim who doesn't complain is a real hero. That throws new light on the subject. We got very tired some time ago hearing one of them tell how much he doesn't complain, not knowing, of course, that he was something of a hero.

Those new sun-back effects, a fashion note says, are intended to prolong life, and also to reveal that quite a bit of it is prolonged unnecessarily.

Who can remember when the girl who could choose between a dozen suitors eventually married only one of them?

An Indianapolis hospital successfully performed an operation to remove a bandit's criminal tendencies; the patient died.

A health expert says grouches cause indigestion, and that's another reason that we never get a favorable reaction from eating spinach.

It's the Office Cynic's observation that about the time the strawberries begin to go bad, they start putting more of them on the shortcake.

What really happens is that the burned child tries it again on the theory that the fire may have cooled a trifle.

Pity the man who does no work. He has no vacation to look forward to.

Half of the troubles of professional golfdom come from trying to keep up with the Joneses.

Vacation time also gives parents a chance to learn why teachers require months of it.

THROUGH OUR SIEVE

Many of men many minds, and as many appetites.

Some men pay an exorbitant price to see the inside of a penitentiary.

Let nobody despair. Even the richest man in the world doesn't know everything.

Up to this moment the nearest approach to perpetual motion is the thing that goes without saying.

An automobile 125 feet long and 35 feet wide is being built for use in the Sahara desert, where there is ample parking space.

Looking for reasons why modern young men are reluctant to marry? This is a find: "Fingernails now are supposed to match the shoe heels."

Possibly it is true, as related, that some kinds of lipsticks are poisonous. You can never tell. In our unprofessional opinion the man's first symptom would be a tendency toward restlessness.

CHOICE WINES AVAILABLE TO THE GUESTS

Washington, Oct. 9—Choice wines and champagne from the British Embassy cellar were available to those guests who desired it at the embassy dinner and reception last night in honor of Prime Minister MacDonald.

Sir Elme Howard, the British Ambassador, made it known last spring that when the present supply of liquor at the Embassy was exhausted, he would not avail himself of diplomatic immunity or replenish it.

WHY PLUMBERS GO BACK AFTER THEIR TOOLS

Boston Oct. 10—The mystery as to why a plumber always has to go back for his tools was solved at the Massachusetts plumbers' convention. Vice-President William E. Moore explained: "Yes we're a big laugh to the man in the street. But I'd like to see the same man stagger to a job with 500 tools, which make up a complete plumbing kit. That's the only way we could be prepared for all emergencies—bring the whole lot."

World's Series On The Air Station CFNB of this city will continue to broadcast the world series base ball games it was announced yesterday. Tomorrow the Cubs and Athletics will meet at Philadelphia. The report of the game will be brought in direct from the field by short wave lengths and rebroadcast from local station. The radio report is far superior to a telegraphic bulletin service and all owners of receiving sets should listen in.

Referee Here R. H. Gunn, of Montreal, member of MacTier Cup Committee arrived here at noon today and is registered at the Barker House. Mr. Gunn, who is well known in Maritime and Upper Canada for his interest in Rugby football, will referee the game between the City and U. N. B. this afternoon at College Field.
