WHAT IT COSTS

What is the actual cost per mile of running an automobile. This question is often perplexing to public officials who drive cars in connection with their duties and are given some latitude when charging up their traveling expenses. Perhaps these people will be interested in knowing that according to Popular Mechanics' magazine data collected from the operation of more than 800 automobiles in different parts of the United States and on various kinds of roads, show that the average cost of running a car is six and one half cents a mile. These figures have been gathered by the Iowa State Engineering Experiment station under the direction of T. R. Agg, highway engineer. Based on an annual travel of 11,000 miles, the average for all the cars on which reports were received, the operating costs range from four to nine cents a mile. Medium weight six cylinder automobiles cost 8.4 cents per mile. The medium weight four cylinder was approximately two cents less. Interesting facts were revealed as to the effect of good or poor roads on operating costs. Estimated savings in the average car-running costs due to road improvements were nearly one cent per mile, by changing from an intermediate road to one of high type construction; 1.07 cents a mile on a low type changed to intermediate type and 2.06 cents a mile when the low type was changed to a high.

NERVOUS BREAKDOWNS

Dr. George R. Dodson, professor in Washington university, St. Louis, knows about nervous breakdowns. The breakdown follows an unconscious desire for it. He calls the collapse a way out for the person trying to escape the conflicts of life. Professor Dodson sees happiness and love as the dikes protecting men and women against nervous collapse. If you're happy it doesn't make much difference how hard you work. Your nerves won't fret.

American tourists are already making use of the airport recently established at Moncton. A Boston owned plane with five people on board landed there on Saturday last. Their actual flying time for the trip was four hours and twenty-five minutes.

A speaker addressing the American Philosophical Society let loose a new word, "spelunculist," which, he explained, describes a guy who knows more and more about less and less. A spelunculist is this year's college graduate next December.

An opportunity is being given for inmates in a old men's home at Maplewood, New Jersey, to play golf. That's a fine temptation to put in the way of feet that ought to be treading an honorable path toward a virtuous end!

Yale professor says our speech is becoming too brief. We reckon that chap never addressed one of those service clubs where they give you about twenty minutes to spill an hour's talk.

When an American cook book was reprinted in England peanut butter and mayonnaise sandwiches are omitted, because neither is ever eaten there. Now a certain local husband is demanding that the next family picnic be held in England.

Writer says the "rah-rah spirit" among students is disappearing. However, there seems to be disposition to let whoopee take its place, which isn't so good, either, if you ask us.

The year's Grand Prix for sound counsel goes to the 80-year old great-grandmother, who writes in a current magazine, To get along with a husband treat him as if he had a little common sense.

A Massachusetts man is supposed to have held his breath for 14 minutes and three seconds. This is nothing in comparison to the fellow who held his breath during the entire bull stock market.

Little travel facts you may have overlooked: "On account of the arc of the earth, a person going from New York to San Francisco, using an upper berth, travels 16 inches farther than one in a lower berth."

The difference between the sexes seems ineradicable: No man, while touring, would hitch a three-pound flatiron to a hotel light-socket every night to iron out a suit for dinner.

Always a pathetic figure in the literary scene is the solid husband of the famed poetess whose specialty is little poems about her boy friend going far away and her heart being empty.

There is some lesson in every disaster: Shouldn't X-ray films be stored and handled on the top floors of hospital buildings?

"The pedestrian has all the best of it," mooned a driver recently. "He doesn't have to get his mudguards ironed out after the bump."

Chap has invented a clock he claims will run 10,000 years without winding, but we'd like to know how he's going to prove it.

What was the idea of widening the golf ball and leaving the hole the same size?

THROUGH OUR SIEVE

Hi Slocum says that you didn't need to button up your overcoat yesterday.

In Utopia the paper towel acquires a soft, velvety surface.

Farmers do much of their spring hoping, behind the plow. That is the practical way.

Ambassador Dawes told the reporters to go to hell. And that made the story.

Radio goes in one ear and out the other. A newspaper can be used for wrapping the garbage.

When a mother, father and daughter live together and there is an argument, father is the minority.

Hi Slocum says that the Empire shopping week idea is not approved by the merchants of Houlton and Calais.

Dempsey has been offered $500,000 to fight. That's quite a large chip to put on a man's shoulder.

"Another thing that leaves us cold," says the Ohio State Journal, "is a fat girl talking baby talk to us." Run, Bob, run like the dickens.

A paragrapher confesses that he looks at a girl's legs twice. He gives his reason, but that is not important. The thought is that his days must be full.

Sometimes, when the spirit of reform overwhelms us, he feel there ought to be a curfew law for rumble seats. Then the old horse and buggy days are recalled and with them the disheartening phrase, "What's the use?"
