HAD INDIGESTION Could Keep Nothing on Stomach

Indigestion is one of the worst forms of stomach trouble. The stomach becomes upset and you have a raw, debilitated feeling in it.
After a meal you feel that you must get rid of that nasty, bilious, burning sensation; that souring and rising of the food which is so unpleasant and in many cases very painful.

It is not necessary for you to be troubled with indigestion when Burdock Blood Bitters may be so easily obtained. This old and well known remedy, which is a combination of nature's best roots, herbs, barks and berberies, will cure indigestion and all stomach troubles.

Mr. Lazare Savoy, Pokemouche, N.
B., writes: "About two years ago I was troubled with indigestion that had I could keep nothing on my stomach. I was sorely disappointed in everything I tried to relieve me. At last a friend advised me to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I took four bottles and can now eat anything that is set in front of me." That grand old medicine, B.B.B., has been on the market for the past forty years, and we claim, without any fear of contradiction, that it is the best cure for all stomach troubles.

The Dog Star

BY
Coralie Stanton
and Heath Hosken

she had done. "Lorion. It was he who opened your safe. Think for a moment. Who else could it have been? He had the key."

"But," he said, "last night—you—you—"

"I know," she answered hastily.
"I was wrong. It was wicked of me.
But I was sorry for him. I couldn't help it. And I knew what you thought of him—how you trusted him. I thought of him, and of you, too. I wanted to save him. It was an impulse. It was foolish, wicked—but I meant no harm."

Monk had begun to pace the room.

"Tell me exactly what happened," he said.

"Mr. Lorion dined with me. I felt awfully lonely after you had gone, Glare." She gave him a swift, flattering glance. "I wanted to be with someone who could talk about you and tell me that you would be all right. You know, every time you go to that dreadful West Coast I tremble.
We talked about you at dinner, and afterwards—I don't think we talked about much else. Mr. Lorion left early. I went up to go to bed, but I couldn't sleep, so I sat in here and read. The servants, I believed, had all gone to bed. Then I heard noises, and I couldn't make them out at all. I opened the door and listened. The sounds came from downstairs. I crept down, and when I was in the hall I saw that the library door was open, and that in your room beyond there was a light. I went through the safe in the wall, which was open.
All the lights were on. I shouldn't have thought anything, beyond being astonished that he had come back.
I knew that you trusted him implicitly.
But he heaped me and turned round, and an awful look of horror came into his face, and he rushed across the room, opened the window, and dashed out on to the veranda. I saw that he had some papers in his hand. Then I knew that there was something wrong. And a moment later I heard your voice and your footsteps. Oh, I was so glad."

"And yet you lied to me, Theodora," said he. His eyes were fixed on her face with a kind of sorrowful appeal.

It seemed that even in the midst of this startling revelation what he most felt was that she had lied to him.

"Oh, I was so dazed," she answered in a low, humble voice. "And I could hardly realize it, and I knew what you thought of him."

"But you knew him to be a thief?"

She looked away. She had not dreamed of all the details when she told her first fib.

"It was for your sake—really, Glare, you must believe that."

"And you lied when the police were here?"

"It was all to save him—because of you. Ever since I haven't been able to rest."

"And that story about the books he came back to fetch?"

"I made it up. I put the books there myself. Oh, it was all because of you."

"And yet you knew that he had taken the papers?"

"Oh, but I didn't realize. I didn't know how important they were! Really—until he ran away I didn't think it even extraordinary that he should have opened the safe. I didn't know what the papers were."

He had resumed his walk. For an instant an expression of intense agitation had convulsed his face. It had almost seemed as if he would collapse. Out of his chalk-white face his eyes had stared like those of a man who hears sentence of death pronounced on him.

Theodora made use of the time to review the situation from her own point of view. She was growing terribly frightened. It seemed quite different now from what she had imagined, when Lorion had walked out of the house, having announced his intention of telling Glare the whole truth.

Then she had been seized with panic. She had only thought of one thing—to prevent her husband from hearing the truth. There was only one way of preventing that, and that was by forestalling Lorion and telling her story first.

This she had done, and now she was terrified, for Glare believed her implicitly. He would punish the traitor; he would prosecute him.
And what would happen then? Lorion was innocent. He would not hesitate to say so—to prove it.

Of course, Lorion would be able to prove his innocence. Anyhow, he would tell the true story of that night.
It was not likely that he would allow himself to be branded a traitor and a thief for the sake of a woman who was nothing on earth to him. No, the truth would come out, and she would stand discredited, branded a liar, a mean thing, who had tried to shelter herself behind one of her husband's servants.

Her surprise and relief could not be described in words when Monk stopped his pacing of the room and came and stood quite close to her, and looked up into her face with his usual calm, direct gaze, and said:

"Theodora, I am glad you have told me this. I can't tell you how glad I am. And now I want you to promise me that you will forget all about it."

"Forget!" She echoed the word in amazement.

"Yes," he said distinctly and authoritatively. "I have reasons. I cannot explain them to you, my darling. But I don't want this to go any further."

"You are not going to prosecute him?" Her voice shook.
"For the present—no."
She heaved a sigh of intense relief.
"You are not going to tax him with it?"

"We shall understand each other," her husband retorted somewhat grimly. "But I don't want you to think any more about it. There are ways of bringing a crime home to a man outside the Law Courts," he added.
"You understand. I have good reasons." Theodora. You are not to alter your behavior towards Lorion in any respect. You are not to be astonished if I don't alter mine. Do you understand?"

"Of course I understand!" she gasped. "That is, I hear your words, Glare."

"That's all that's necessary, dearest," he said.

She was so relieved by the turn affairs had taken that she hardly realized the peculiar nature of his conduct when he came back and said to her very emphatically, before he went down to his own room:

"Remember, Theodora, as far as Lorion's concerned, whenever you see him you will make no difference in your manner towards him. That is my wish."

"You know that you need say no more," she answered in a low voice.

"Your wish is my law, Glare. I only wish I could have spared you the knowledge, and at this time particularly."

"Oh, don't trouble your beautiful head about it, my darling," he replied.

"I am going to confound all my enemies. I am going to show the world that I am innocent of these atrocious things that I am accused of."

He kissed her, and again the man was transformed. He was no longer the astute brain, the marvellous, tireless organism, the far-seeing, great-minded Empire builder who "thought in continents." He was merely the grey-haired and rather pathetic man who worshipped and idolized a woman a great many years younger than himself. There lay his weakness.

Anyone seeing him then must have known that here was his vulnerable spot.

Left alone, Theodora Monk did not appear at all like a woman at ease.

It was true that one danger was over for the present. She did not suppose for a moment that if Lorion found her husband now and told him the truth, the young man would be believed. Her empire over Glare was too great, too complete. He would take her word against the whole world; of that she was certain. And she had lied to him in order to ensure her own safety. As far as the bare, unsupported word of anyone could harm her, she was beyond the reach of harm.

But there was more than anybody's word. There were the papers that she had taken from the safe, and that had in turn been taken from her blotter, certainly within half an hour of the time she had taken them.

The insoluble mystery of their disappearance had given her no rest.
It had not been part of her plan to let Lorion know that they had gone, but in reality their disappearance nearly drove her mad.

Who could possibly have taken them?

It was the most incomprehensible mystery. Who could have been in the house; who could have had the knowledge of them?

There was a knock at the door.
The butler entered with some letters.
She took them, but did not attempt to open them. At the door Gamble paused.

"My lady," he said with a certain hesitation.

"What is it, Gamble?"

"I wonder whether your ladyship would speak to Thurston?"

"Thurston?"

Suffered With Heart For Ten Years

WOULD NEARLY SMOTHER.

There is nothing that brings with it such fear of impending death as to wake up in the night with that awful sense of smothering. The uncertain and irregular heart action causes the greatest distress of both mind and body.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are the only remedy that can give prompt relief and effect a complete cure in cases of such severity.

They strengthen and invigorate the heart, so that it beats strong and regular, and tone up the nervous system so that the cause of so much anxiety becomes a thing of the past.

Mrs. M. O. McCready, Wapella, Sask., writes: "I am not much of a believer in medicines, but I feel that it is only right for me to let you know what your wonderful remedy has done for me, and in a very short time, too. I had suffered terribly with my heart for nearly ten years, could scarcely do any work, and would nearly smother at times. I had many remedies, some only relieving me for a time. I got a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and felt so much better that I kept on using them, and can truthfully say I feel like a new woman."

"I would advise anyone with heart trouble to use them."

50c., or three boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

A man in close touch with provincial affairs claims that at least $250,000 is wasted each year in graft. Time to put a stop to it.
