DEMONSTRATION OF ACTUAL
WARFARE BY KILTIES

A graphic demonstration of trench warfare of the Military Tournament to be held by the 236th New Brunswick Kilties at the exhibition grounds Monday afternoon, promises to be a big attraction and well worth seeing. Trenches have been dug and entanglements placed in position in readiness for the display, which will be under the direction of returned officers who have seen service on the western front and who, from their intimate knowledge of modern warfare, are well fitted to make the exhibition as realistic as possible.

Scheme of Action.

The action is supposed to take place at dusk and represents a company in attack. The enemy is seen in occupation of a fougasse—a small mine which hurls rocks and earth at the defenders. The bombers then advance, throwing their bombs, which tear up the enemy's wire entanglements and parapets, thus preparing the way for the infantry. The bombers are followed by infantry who cross the glacis and attack the enemy with cold steel. The work of the signallers is also seen. These with field telephones follow the attackers closely so that communication may be kept up uninterruptedly with headquarters. The wires of the field telephones become broken and the methods of locating and repairing the break are shown. The stretcher bearers pick up the wounded give first aid and carry them back to their regimental dressing station. Ammunition is carried up into the trench. The British finally capture the trench and the enemy retreats to the rear. A working party under the direction of company officers, proceeds to consolidate the newly won positions, reversing the enemy's parapet.

Officers in Charge.

The whole display is under the direction of Capt. E. J. Mooney, formerly of the 4th Canadian Mounted Rifles. Lieut. F. H. Ryder, formerly of the 10th Battalion, "The White Gurkhas," has charge of the bombers, while Lieuts. R. L. Brewer and D. G. Peters, both of whom went overseas with the "Fighting 26th," are overseeing the bayonet men and signallers respectively. Sergt. R. J. Hagans, a former member of the 1st Canadian Field Ambulance, will be in charge of the stretcher bearers.

Day's Programme.

The day's programme has been divided into three parts. The first, which is to consist of athletic events, will be held from ten o'clock until twelve in the morning on the Officers' Square. No admission will be charged. In the afternoon a Military Tournament will be held at the Exhibition Barracks. This will consist of numerous athletic events, physical training, bayonet fighting and calisthenics as well as the trench warfare already outlined. The admission fee to the grounds will be twenty-five cents. In the evening a grand Festival and Bonnet Hop will be held on the Queen street Barrack Square, to which an admission fee of ten cents will be charged. The day will be observed as a civic holiday, the merchants having generously agreed to close their places of business.

COALITION GOVERNMENT
MAY BE BROUGHT ABOUT

of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Liberal party. Whether he will accomplish this or not depends to a large extent on whether he is strong enough and big enough to handle firmly the self-seeking politics—first or short-sighted elements of his party. Cabinet ministers, who are looking for senatorships or judgeships, religious extremists who would have "no truck or trade with Laurier," patronage seekers and Nationalists who know that Sir Wilfrid would enter no government in which they are represented, are all loath to give up even present prospects, insecure though they are, as they would have to do under coalition.

But the saving grace of the party believe that the national interests would be best served if Premier Borden dealt ruthlessly with this element and they are urging coalition. On the Liberal side there is not the same responsibility which rests upon the government, since the offer and the details of the offer must first come from the party in power. But there is, on the part of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the men behind him, an earnest desire to do only what is best for the nation. They believe that is not only good patriotism but that is also the best politics, and any coalition proposal, provided it is fair and just to their half of the country, will be frankly and honestly considered.

Meanwhile the conscription bill waits. Until coalition is effected or until it is definitely found to be impracticable, it is expected Premier Borden will hold it back for consideration by the new government, if there is to be one.

Sir Wilfrid's Own Policy.

It is generally believed that, had a general election been sprung upon Canada a little over a year ago when Hon. Robert Rogers declared the people were demanding one in "tone of thunder," Sir Wilfrid would have made his appeal to the electors with the purpose, if successful of immediately forming a non-partisan, win-the-war administration. The present contingency accordingly finds him sympathetic with any sincere patriotic endeavor to supplant a regime of lethargic partisanship with one of energetic unity and co-operation. It is useless to deny that any prospective effort on the part of the leaders and their lieutenants to form such a coalition is being met with considerable opposition on the part of individual groups of their followers. In this respect the premier's troubles are perhaps the greater.

Dissentient Liberals largely content themselves with grumbling that any overtures were delayed for three years until the premier found himself in extremes, and that present-time proposals of coalition are simply attempts at self-preservation.

"Let us get to the people," is their plaint, "and we will form a genuine national war-time government."

Conservative hostility to coalition will be more difficult to deal with. There is the selfishness of members with patronage to distribute and appointments—senatorial and otherwise—to secure. There is further, not a little opposition on the part of present members of the administration to a coalition which they recognize would end their cabinet careers. Hon. Robert Rogers, for instance, is known to be vigorously attacking all efforts toward coalition, and there is disposition to underestimate Mr. Rogers' in-

Another Kiltie Rumor.

The St. John John Times gives currency to the following: "That the senior officers of the 236th Kiltie Battalion will not proceed to England with the unit, and that the unit will cross to England in command of a major, is a rumor that emanates from an authoritative source. The number of junior officers that will proceed to England with the unit will depend entirely upon the number of men who pass the final medical examination. Should 600 of the members of the unit pass the examination, about eighteen junior officers will cross with them. The fate of the senior officers is as yet unknown, but it is likely that the militia department will find employment for many of them, as they are returned men, with but few exceptions.

No Drop in Bread.

According to the local bakers the price of their bread will not be reduced. Many were expecting a drop in price on account of flour dropping but the bakers have decided on selling the one and three-quarter pound loaf for twelve cents. It is understood that twelve cents will be the regulation price.
