

LORD SHAUGHNESSY DISCUSSES THE WAR PROBLEMS

Warns the People Against Creating an Ulster and a Munster in Canada---Compulsory Legislation the Most Serious That Canada Has Ever Enacted---Good Feeling Between Different Sections Must be Promoted.

Words are poor things at best, but the wisest and most timely words and deeds tendered the Canadian people as a whole since the war began, are those of Baron Shaughnessy of Montreal. He is not a politician; he could have crushed and turned into the hands of receivers, certain rival railway interests, more than once since 1914, but his patriotism put the financial credit of the Canadian people and their honor and integrity above all else. Again when his favorite son was killed in action in France, a call went up to bring home the body of the gallant youth. "No, my son's body will be brought home when his comrades, who fall beside him, are returned, but not before." Such was his decision. There should be no distinctions between princes and peasants in the firing line. It is no secret, moreover, that when the Duke of Connaught, the Liberal chiefs, and some industrial leaders were planning a coalition administration in 1915-16, Baron Shaughnessy was their unanimous choice for prime minister. These are only a few of the lesser things to show the part he has played since the beginning of the war. He had more to do than any other Canadian in encouraging the United States and President Wilson, to reach the decision which was announced to all the world by the president on April 2nd, 1917. Now he warns his countrymen to avoid the creation of another "Ulster and Munster" in this Dominion during a political crisis.

Lord Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who was in Ottawa recently commenting on the conscription issue now before parliament, while not expressing himself either for or against pointed to the seriousness of the problems before parliament, and the great need of men to Famous Highway Road in India Has Been Used by Hundreds of Generations.

Search where you will, you will find no highway in the whole world so romantic as the Grand Trunk Road of India. A stately avenue of three roads in one — the centre of hard metal, the roads on each side ankle-deep in silvery dust — fringed by double rows of trees, it runs for 1,400 miles through the vast northern plains which skirt the Himalayas, from Calcutta to far Peshawar, which keeps sentinel at the gate of Afghanistan. From horizon to horizon it stretches like a broad white ribbon, as seemingly straight as if traced by a gigantic ruler. And dotted along the entire length are hundreds of wayside rest houses, each with its arched and turreted gateway.

For 3,000 years the Himalayas have looked down on this road and have seen it as they see it today. It was the world's greatest highway before Rome was cradled. Alexander the Great led his Greeks along it to conquest of northern India; and Buddha himself took his daily walks along it centuries before Christ was cradled. It has seen 100 generations of men come and go; yet today it is, to the eye, exactly the same as in the long-gone years when Nineveh was a proud city and our own ancestors gnawed bones in their caves.

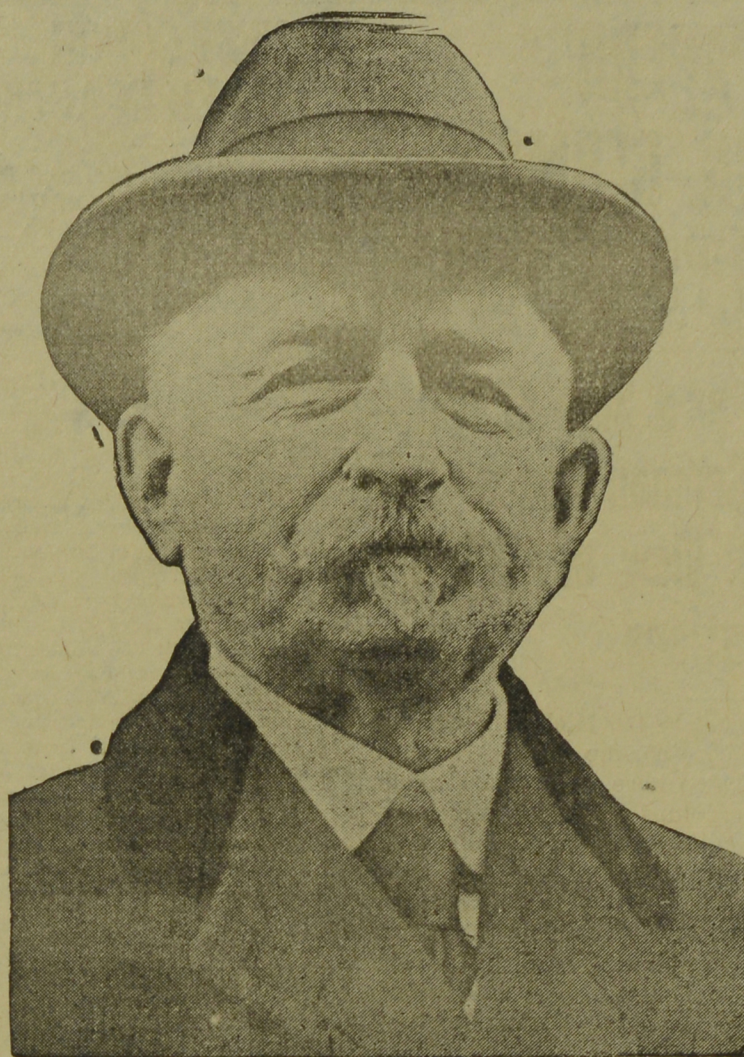

Keep the Canadian battalions to fighting strength. The fullest co-operation is urged by Lord Shaughnessy to promote a proper understanding between the different sections of the country "to prevent the creation of an Ulster and Munster in our Dominion of Canada." Lord Shaughnessy said: "At the moment I prefer to say nothing about the policy of conscription now engaging the attention of the government and of parliament.

"Beyond doubt it is urgently necessary to enlist a sufficient number of men to make up for the wastage in our Canadian battalions overseas and the attitude of our Canadian people since the outbreak of the war furnished ground for the conviction that they will wish to have these men provided cause heated public protests and agitation of a serious character. Out of this might grow a situation that would be most deplorable because Canada's splendid contribution to Britain and her allies in the war would be neutralized to an important extent if the enemy could point to Canada as a house divided against itself.

"The statesmen of the country and all good citizens should unselfishly coby some process.

"If the requisite number of men of military age and fitness, recognizing their duty could join the colors voluntarily there would be no necessity for legislation.

"Selective conscription is suggested as the alternative, but as that contemplates military service it becomes the most serious form of legislation Canada has ever had occasion to deal with.

"The suggestion of compulsory military service overseas will be obnoxious to a great many people in different sections of the country and, with them legislation to bring it into effect will be most unpopular and may operate to promote understanding and good feeling between the different sections of the country and to prevent the creation of an Ulster and Munster in our Dominion of Canada."

"Every citizen who uses more in his household than his household actually needs is increasing the cost of living for those less fortunate, and he is hindering the prosecution of the war."

Sir Thomas White, Minister of Finance.

THE well-to-do woman who sits at her phone and orders provisions lavishly, regardless of price, is abusing the power of money as a bully abuses brute strength!

No longer can we help ourselves as we see fit from an unlimited food supply—we are either limiting our buying to our own real needs or "hogging" someone else's share.

Extravagant buying by those who can afford it, with waste in some kitchens, and excess at some tables, will inevitably bring still greater hardships to those who cannot afford the prices, and hunger to those who must live on less.

Buy for your household as carefully and economically as your husband buys for his factory, store or office. Study food values as well as prices—make it a point to know just what you are getting—eliminate waste—and you'll find that you can feed your family well on far less than you spend now.
