Signature of *Dr. H. H. PlummerFixing Things For Jimmy

About the time Jimmy Reynolds crossed the rustic bridge leading to the Hotel Grande he began to search the porch for unmistakable signs of a certain person. Usually those signs were easy to find—a big chair, with some one clothed in white within it, with a book hiding the face just up to the eyes, and a demure expression of unconcern, affected, for the benefit of other occupants of the broad veranda. Unmistakable, for the signs been always the same ever since Jimmy Reynolds had danced with her two weeks before, taken her driving the next morning, and appeared faithfully and worshipfully every evening since. Hence the very good reasons that Jimmy was scanning the vista of the big veranda as he crossed the rustic bridge.

But something was wrong. In the first place, there were two chairs in the familiar spot in stead of one. In the second place, the book had been laid aside, and from where he had hesitated to stare Jimmy rather felt that no book had been there. And in the third, the occupant of that second chair was a man. Jimmy seethed inwardly and went on—with a swifter gait.

Suddenly to hesitate, to stop, and then to veer in his course. A sudden thumping had come into his breast. His hands were moist and the perspiration burst forth on his forehead. No wonder that the name of Blackburn had sounded familiar! Ed's sister!

Whereupon, with the realization that Marion Blackburn was exceedingly engaged with a person Jimmy did not care to meet, there was a quick skirting of summer resort hedges and shrub lined pathways. She hadn't seen. There was a consolation in that—and Jimmy hurried on, back the way he had come, to his own hotel. There he hesitated a moment on the veranda—just long enough to nod his head—and then rushed for his own room, a wondering sister following. Safe behind the door, he turned to her.

"You're a fine oone," he announced, scathingly.

Jane Reynolds, panting a bit, looked up wonderingly.

"Why, Jimmy—what on earth have I done, I—"

"It isn't what you've done," announced Jimmy darkly, "it's what you haven't done."

"Haven't done—how?"

"Why didn't you tell me she was Ed Blackburn's sister?"

"Tell you who was what?"

"Why didn't you tell me that Marion Blackburn was Ed Blackburn's sister?"

You knew it all the time. You knew how I hate him and how—"

"How this, that, and the other thing, just because you went to Purcell and he went to Greenbauch, and because, like a couple of silly fools, you had a fight one day over a football game and he blacked your eye. Why don't you tell the truth about it, Jimmy?"

"Truth?" Jimmy Reynolds rammed his hands into his pockets. "I did tell the truth. Yes, I hate him—because he blacked my eye. He did it unethically."

Slants of HumorDOUBTFUL LOCATION.

During an inquest held in Cincinnati the following question was put to one of the witnesses by the deputy coroner:

"Where was the deceased struck by the motor car?"

The witness, a surgeon, replied: "At the juncture of the dorsal and cervical vertebrae."

The deputy coroner looked puzzled. "Will you please point that out on the map?" he asked, indicating one that hung on the wall.

PAID FOR TWO.

On Sunday grandma took Baby Jane, aged three years, to church. When they took up the collection Jane put her two pennies in the box. Grandma was looking for her purse, when baby said: "Dat's all right, grandma. I'se paid for two."

BROUGHT MEMORIES.

The master of the household had ordered that the maid should clean a coat of his with gasoline. The order was not carried out, so he asked his wife:

"Why won't this girl of ours clean my coat with gasoline?"

"Oh," said the wife, "ever since that chauffeur jilted her she hasn't been able to stand the odor of it."

Miss Margaret Carnegie, only daughter of Andrew Carnegie, is active in philanthropic work, especially as an officer of the Armstrong League, which is devoted to the welfare of the negro and Indian races.

"How?" Jane Reynolds laughed. "I thought he did it with a pine board."

"Yes, and I had no right to kick. But that's neither here nor there. That happened three years ago, and it doesn't make any difference whether he hit me with a baseball bat or his fist. He hit me and he blacked my eye, and there are some things in a fellow's college memory that he can't forget. But what I want to know is why you didn't tell me."

"Be cause, in the first place," answered Jane Reynolds, "I didn't know it. You seem to think I know all the family history of the Blackburns."

"Not at all. But you knew him at college. He went to the same school you did and you saw him at dances and all that sort of thing."

"Well, did that mean that he had to give me his whole family tree?" Jane was tormenting now. "Besides, Jimmy dear, since you're getting all wrought up about it, all that I ever heard him call his sister was a pet name, 'Jigger.' And how I would be able to tell the combination between 'Jigger' and Miss Marion Blackburn is more than I can see. And on top of all that, you have been so busy taking up all her time that you haven't even had a minute to introduce your sister. I've never even seen her."

Jimmy stared out of the window.

"That isn't my fault. I've been busy. Two weeks isn't much time for a fellow to—"

"All right, I'll forgive you if you'll forgive me. Now what do you want me to do. You want something," she concluded sagely, "or you wouldn't have dragged me up here. So what is it?"

Jimmy Reynolds rammed both hands deep into his pockets. He stared at the floor a long time before answering.

"Gosh, Jane," he announced at last, "this is an awful mess."

"What?"

"Me being in love with the sister of a fellow I've had a fight with. Come to think it over, I don't believe I've got anything against him."

Jane opened her eyes in studied acquiescence.

"Oh, not a thing in the world—considering you're in love with his sister."

"Well not only that,"—Jimmy shifted his position a bit—"you see, it wasn't anything but a kid scrap. Of course we were both mad, but I guess I did kick him at first. But it wasn't my fault—"

"Certainly not."

"Well, it wasn't. Hadn't I sprained my right wrist the day before? I couldn't fight with one hand."

"Maybe he had a broken leg," Jane answered solemnly, "maybe that's why he hit you with that board."

"Listen, Jane, this isn't a joking matter. Can't you be serious?"

"Certainly. Just as serious as you are."

"But I am serious."

"So am I. What do you want? Now, Jimmy—she came closer to him and pulled playfully at his rather tousled hair—"you want something, so why beat around the bush? I know you—so what is it?"

"Well," and Jimmy wiggled a foot uncertainly—"one thing's sure I can't have much of a chance to make love to a girl if her brother's got it in for me."

"That's true"

"He'd settle me in about five minutes."

"Or less"

"Well, then—" and Jimmy turned with an air of finality—"it's purely up to you, Jane. You've got to do the honors."

PROCLAMATION

His Honour the Lieutenant Governor directs the publication of the following for general information:

Whereas, the 1st of July is the semi-centennial of the confederation of the Canadian Provinces

And, Whereas, a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons was appointed to consider and report on the proper celebration of the occasion;

And, Whereas, the said committee have recommended that, "As the day falls on Sunday, it seems to be particularly fitting that the churches and the Sabbath schools of all denominations should incorporate into their exercises the recognition of the facts and lessons embodied in our national birth and fifty years of progress, and have requested that all Clergymen and Sabbath School Superintendents give to the celebration their hearty and intelligent co-operation";

And, Whereas, Monday the 2nd day of July, has been fixed by proclamation for the celebration of Dominion Day, and the committee have recommended that the celebration on that day be as "general as possible, without expensive and elaborate display, as befits war time, and carried out on the broadest social and democratic lines, a plain sincere people's demonstration, a tribute to the founders of our Dominion and the institutions and ideals of our common country."

We do most earnestly request that the cities and municipalities of the Province, clubs and patriotic associations, co-operate with the citizens generally in commemorating the day and the occasion, along the lines suggested in the report.

In view of the terrible war in which we are engaged the occasion should be one for serious thought and full recognition of the grave dangers to which Canada and the Empire are exposed, and the obligations that rest upon us all as citizens. We especially request that the clergymen of all denominations throughout the Province, Sunday School Superintendents and Teachers, in the religious services of Sunday, the 1st of July, do honor to the memory of the noble and brave men who have made the supreme sacrifice for their country, as well as to those who are still facing danger and death upon the battlefield, and that the religious exercises of the day be characterized with a spirit of loyalty, unselfish service, and earnest prayer for the suc-

ANNOUNCEMENT.

On July 1st, the undersigned will open a new retail dairy in the city. Fifteen years' experience have taught me that absolute cleanliness combined with quality of goods, are the essentials necessary to make such a business a success.

Thanks to the public for the liberal patronage afforded me in the past, and soliciting further favors, in return for which I trust I shall always be able to give satisfaction to patrons.
