Mrs. Frank Arseneau, Newcastle, N. B., heart trouble for the past five or six years, and as I had tried many kinds of medicine without getting any bet-

CHAPTER XVI—Brood tells Frederic the story of his dead wife and the music master. Yvonne tells Brood he has struck a man sleeping, and that his own heart beats breaking.

CHAPTER XVII—Yvonne goes to Frederic in the jade-room and asks him to go away with her. He refuses. She taunts, then tempts him. Brood comes through the doorway. Ranjab behind him.

CHAPTER XXI—Yvonne shows Brood proof of his dead wife's innocence and confesses her revenge a bitter failure. She has learned to love Brood.

CHAPTER XXII—Brood goes to see his wounded son.

CHAPTER XXIII—Frederic recovers and he and Lydia plan to go abroad with Brood. The young couple endeavor unsuccessfully to reconcile Brood to his wife, whom he plans to leave alone in the home.

CHAPTER XXIV—On leaving, Brood orders his wife to remain at home until he returns. She consents. Six months later a wireless comes from him, calling her to him, but she tells Briggs and Daves she will not go to him. "He will come to me." "Send him a cable saying . . . I cannot come to him." to share my fortune with her son. It is a pledge that I took before my father died a few years ago. If the boy ever appeared, he was to have his mother's share of the estate—and it is not an inconsiderable amount, James.

He is independent of you. He need ask nothing of you. I was taking him home to his own."

She shrank slightly as he stood over her. There was more of wonder and pity in his face than condemnation.
She looked for the anger she had expected to arouse in him, and was dismayed to see that it was not revealed in his steady, appraising eyes.

"Your plan deserved a better fate than this. It was prodigious! I—I can almost pity you."

"Have—have you no pain—no regret —no grief?" she cried weakly.

"Yes," he said, controlling himself with difficulty. "Yes, I know all these and more." He picked up the package of letters and glanced at the subscription on the outer envelope. Suddenly he raised them to his lips and, with his eyes closed, kissed the words that were written there. Her head drooped, and a sob came into her throat. She did not look up until he began speaking to her again, quietly, even patiently. "But why should you, even in your longing for revenge—why should you have planned to humiliate and degrade him even more than I could have done? Was it just to your sister's son that you should blight his life, that you should turn him into a skulking, sneaking betrayer? What would you have gained in the end? His loathing, his scorn—my God, Therese, did you not think of all this?"

"I have told you that I thought of everything. I was mistaken. I did not stop to think that I would be taking him away from happiness in the shape of love that he might bear for someone else. I did not know that there was a Lydia Desmond. When I came to know, my heart softened and my purpose lost most of its force. He would have been safe with me, but would he have been happy? I could not give him the kind of love that Lydia promised. I could only be his mother's sister to him. He was not in love with me. He never loved Lydia. I fascinated him—just as I fascinated you. He would not have gone away with me, even after you had told him that he was not your son. He would not do that to you, James, in spite of the blow you struck him. He was loyal to Lydia and to himself."

"And what did he think of you?" demanded Brood scornfully.
"If you had not come upon us here, he would have known me for who I am and he would have forgiven me. I had asked him to go away with me. He refused. Then I was about to tell him the whole story of my life, of his life and of yours. Do you think he would have refused forgiveness to me? No!
He would have understood."

"But up to that hour he thought of you as a—what shall I say?"
"A bad woman? Perhaps. I did not care. It was part of the price I was to pay in advance. I would have told him everything as soon as the ship on which we sailed was outside the harbor yonder. That was my intention, and I know you believe me when I say that—there was nothing more in my to be his father, he would not forget that he has never been your son. You have hurt him since he was a babe.

Would he forget? Would he forgive?
No! When you came into this room and found us, I was about to go down on my knees to him to thank him for saving me from my own designs. I realized then, as I had come to suspect in the past few months, that I had not counted on my own conscience.
James, I—I would not have carried out my plan. I had faltered and my cause was lost. What have I accomplished?
Am I able to gloat over you? What have I wrought, after all? I weakened under the love she bore for you, permitted it to creep in and fill my heart.
Do you understand? I do not hate you now. It is something to know that you have worshipped her all these years.
You were true to her. What you did long ago was not your fault. You believed that she had wronged you.
But you went on loving her. That is what weakened my resolve. You loved her to the end, she loved you to the end. Well, in the face of that, could I go on hating you? You must have been worthy of her love. She knew you better than all the world. You came to me with love for her in your heart.
You took me, and you loved her all the time. I am not sure, James, that you are not entitled to this miserable, unhappy love I have come to feel for you —my own love, not Matilde's."

"You—you are saying this so that I may refrain from throwing you out into the street—"

"No!" she cried, coming to her feet.
"I shall ask nothing of you. If I am to go it shall be because I have failed.
I have been a blind, vain-glorious fool.
The trap has caught me instead of you, and I shall take the consequences. I have lost—everything!"

"Yes, you have lost everything," said he steadily.

"You despise me?"
"I cannot ask you to stay here—after this."

"But I shall not go. I have a duty to perform before I leave this house. I intend to save the life of that poor boy downstairs, so that he may not die believing me to be an evil woman, a faithless wife. Thank God, I have accomplished something! You know that he is your son. You know that my sister was as pure as snow. You know that you killed her and that she loved you in spite of the death you brought to her. That is something. That—"

Brood dropped into the chair and buried his face on his quivering arms.
In muffled tones came the cry from his soul. "They've all said that he is like me. I have seen it at times, but I would not believe. I fought against it, resolutely, madly, cruelly! Now it is too late and I see! I see, I feel! Damn you —oh, damn you—you have driven me to the killing of my own son!"

She stood over him, silent for a long time, her hand hovering above his head.

"He is not going to die," she said at last, when she was sure that she had full command of her voice. "I can promise you that, James. I shall not go from this house until he is well. I shall nurse him back to health and give him back to you and Matilde, for now I know that he belongs to both of you and not to her alone. New, James, you may go down to him. He is not conscious. He will not hear you praying at his bedside. He—"

A knock came at the door—a sharp, imperative knock. It was repeated sev-
