Slants of Humor

THE TIMID DOVE.

The dove of peace in hiding went Upon a lofty limb.
When coin and effort must be spent We got no help from him.
He lifted up a tiny note,
The best that he could do,
And said, "My heart is in my throat,
I can no longer coo."

"And anyhow," the dove exclaimed From his abode obscure,
"The program which the world has framed Is one I can't endure.
For meat is now so hard to get, Should I myself reveal;
No more they'd treat me as a pet, They'd serve me for a meal."

PARTICULAR BOARDER.

Wanted—Something expensive. I want an exceptionally fine room; it must be in an exclusive neighborhood; breakfast and the evening meal required. Price is of secondary consideration if the proposition is high class. I am an Easterner, single, and accustomed to refinement of an ultra degree. I should prefer a family of means who would consider no one else and would take me more as an accommodation to me than through necessity; references exchanged. Address CH158.

DOUBLE MEANING.

"On account of the general wish of the ladies who have been enjoying our Friday afternoon bridge parties no more of these parties will be held this year."—Chicago Yacht Club.

How do you mean enjoying?

QUELQUE LIBATION.

(Taos Valley News.)
Mrs. Alex. Gushorf assisted by some of her friends will pour tea Wednesday afternoon on her spacious veranda.

POSITIONS WANTED?

A candid employment agency advertises: "We could place fifty stenographers in the very best positions if we had them."

MOVABLE CHEEK.

"He dropped his cheek on his hand and gazed at it," writes Samuel Merwin in the Cosmopolitan.

DIDN'T WISH TO HURRY HIM.

(New York Sun.)

She was an exceedingly pretty girl who boarded the downtown local yesterday morning and the Woman Who Saw noted with quiet amusement the swift solicitations of the middle-aged Beau Brummel opposite in making a place for the pretty girl at his side. With a little sigh of relief the girl drew from her bag a letter fresh from the morning's mail. Impatiently she tore it open and her smile of anticipation grew as she became lost in the contents of the big foolscap page.

"Now, wouldn't the man who wrote it just like to be in my place!" mused the Woman, as she watched the pretty picture.

Beau Brummel, too, must have been appreciating the little scene, for he was gazing most intently, but—

"Oh, no," sighed the Woman to herself. "He can't be so rude!"

But he was! That gallant, immaculately garbed gentleman was actually engaged in reading the girl's letter and deriving a vast amount of entertainment from its contents.

"The wretch!" thought the Woman Who Saw as she watched them. "How can he?"

With a lunge the train came to a stop. There was one of those temporary lulls in the hum of subway progress. Suddenly the girl raised her eyes from the bottom of the page. Straight into the startled countenance of the intruder she gazed. Then in a sweet voice, clear as a bell:

"Are you ready to turn now, sir?" she asked, demurely.

MONTREAL DAILY HAS SUSPENDED

(Canadian Press direct wire.)

Montreal, Sept. 19. — The Daily Mail has ceased publication after an uphill fight against financial obstacles. There was no issue of the Daily Mail this morning, and Mr. M. E. Nishols, president and managing director of the Daily Mail company refused to say whether publication would be resumed or not.

One of the things that impressed Explorer McMillan on his return from the north was the increase in the number of white stockings. Observant chaps, those Arctic rangers.

I consider that I owe my life to 'Fruit-a-tives' and I want to say to those who suffer from indigestion, constipation or headaches—'try Fruit-a-tives' and you will get well'. 1917 GRANDMAS

(Boston Record.)

Grandmas of today Aren't like they Were some years Ago, that is some Of 'em aren't. Yesteryear, grandma Used to be a little Old, lady, with a Lace bonnet, black Dress, and little Fancy apron, seated In a soft chair Knitting socks or Shawls together and A tabby on the Floor playing billiards With the ball of Yarn, and grandma Was busy thinking About putting up Preserves, but here's The 1917 grandma. We've seen with Our own glims. She was lit up In a sport suit And was on her Way to the golf Club, and her Racey roadster kicked Up a fuss downtown And out she got, Lifted up the hood, Got busy with A pair of pliers, to Untangle the trouble And get all the cylinders Working on even terms Again—oh, boy, You can't tell 'em From the wrens These days—Tra la!
