for a month. I have had many revelations of every kind, but particularly concerning the military, and I must tell you in all sincerity that the state of mind of the army and that of the naval and military action make but one whole. That's what happened the 16th of April (the date of the French offensive in Champagne, the losses in which have resulted in numerous charges and counter charges in parliament). I do not want to go into details of what occurred then. I have my own ideas on the subject. I may be wrong, but all the same I saw, for I was the subject. I may be wrong, but all the same I saw, for I was the subject on the Champagne front the 16th of the subject. in an observation post on the Champagne front the 16th of April when the soldiers passed, and nothing could be finer:

TELLS PARLIAMENTARY COMMMITTEE THAT THEY MUST INSPIRE PUBLIC CONFIDENCE the Queen.

"Two days later you know what happened. We must not ale is excellent. It has never been better, but the Poilus often look to the rear. Hate grows. Some are in the firing line: be subjected to a fresh trial at this stage of the war. The morothers are not. There are no privileged persons. There are men in factories. Stories spread; evil passions rise.

You are as responsible for the national spirit as you are for arming the frontiers defended by our guns and men. It is from that point of view that I implore you to be guided by the idea that, without bias of any kind for or against Caillaux, you have above all the duty of inspiring public confidence, not in the government, but in yourselves. That is to say, as the republic representatives show that you are in agreement with public feeling, not to prosecute a man, this one or that one, but to see that truth is brought to the light of day in a way that will permit of no doubt whatever. If you do that at the present moment you will have rendered the greatest service possible to your country.
