HEARTY WELCOME TO HON. MR. CARVELL AT ANDOVER

Big Audience Listened to Stirring Address From Minister of Public Works--- A Strong Pronouncement in Regard to Canada's Part in Regard to the Great War--Canada's Sons at the Front Must be Supported.

Andover, Nov. 29. — Andover gave a hearty welcome tonight to Hon. F. B. Carvell when for the first time here he addressed a meeting called in support of a government that stands against the policies enunciated by Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

The meeting was held in the Specialty Theatre and the audience, which numbered some 600 electors, filled the hall to capacity. Every portion of the lower end of Victoria county was represented and the minister was given a splendid hearing. He dealt plainly and succinctly with the one great issue of the campaign and in no uncertain terms told his hearers that if they voted against the selective draft measure they would not be true to their duty, to themselves, their country, and the boys overseas.

Titus J. Carter, ex-M.P.P. for Victoria county and life-long Conservative, occupied the chair.

Hon. Mr. Carvell.

Hon. Mr. Carvell was warmly applauded when he rose. He plunged directly into his subject and referred to the seriousness of the question which had brought them together. It was so serious that it transcended in importance all other questions and the man who could be serious over it had something wrong with his mentality. If anyone had told him a year ago that he would be introduced and eulogized at a political meeting by T. J. Carter he would have thought they were fooling him. Neither would he have thought of asking Mr. Carter to speak for him as they had always belonged to different schools of politics, Mr. Carter being an aggressive Conservative and the speaker a fighting Liberal of the Liberals. In holding those views he thought he was right as Mr. Carter and when the whole matter that brought them together was finished they both would probably return to their opinions.

"Stay or Quit?"

This election is being run on the one great question: "Are we going to stay with the empire or quit?" That is the only question worth while, the only one that merited serious consideration. In the past they had differed on matter of tariff and on economic problems but these were of minor importance when compared with the real big vital issue.

Mr. Carvell then dealt with the pledges made by the Canadian parliament to the soldiers overseas and the promise to continue in the war "to the last man and the last dollar."

An emergency session of parliament was called a few days after the war broke out and lasted four days. That session considered two questions: First—Shall Canada participate in this war and, secondly—Shall we pay our own bills. Canada answered both questions in the affirmative by sending out a call for men and passing a war vote of $50,000,000 to pay the expenses of the soldiers for three or four months.

There was no debate on the question as there was a complete agreement, Sir Wilfrid Laurier declaring that Canada was in this war to the last man and the last dollar, a promise in which the speaker concurred and which he intended to see kept.

When the call was made for 20,000 men the response received was 33,000. These went overseas. Many would never return, but were sleeping their last sleep in France and Flanders, others were in hospital maimed and injured.

He considered that when Canada said to these men: "Go over and we will stand by you to the end," they made a contract that should be kept and the man who would break that contract is guilty of the infamous breach of faith. Every man who went overseas believed Canada would support him and as he viewed that matter it was a question of remaining in the war or quitting, consequently he had no apologies to make for joining the Union government. He could not have done anything else and retained his self-respect for he would carry out the contract he as a member of parliament made with the men who had gone to France to fight our battles for us.

He believed the people of Canada would support the men who voted to keep that contract as he believed the people of Canada placed their duty to the soldiers ahead of every other question. He had been a severe critic of the government but he had supported all the war votes and all he had asked in return was that the money should be honestly spent.

Criticism of that sort was, however, a very small matter now. If money had been mispent he was sorry for it, but consideration of that would not liquidate our debt to the boys at the front. It all comes back to the same question, "Are we going to stick or quit?"

He then dealt with events leading to the formation of Union government. Up to May or June last no public man had ever admired a leader as he had admired Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

"I have not a word to say against him personally," said Mr. Carvell emphatically, "but I do not approve of his policies. We have had no quarrel but he did not measure up to the standards of myself and twenty-six Liberals who left when I did and we had to leave him."

Converted to Conscription, He admitted that when conscription was first in the minds of some of the
