TELL THEIR TROUBLES TO THE JAIL WALL

London, Sept. 15—Humor finds its way even into the military prisons.

One Tommy who found his way into "clink" left his opinion on the wall thus:

"This place is a blinkin' paradise after twenty-three years of nagging by the woman I married," after which he gave her full name, address and occupation.

On the whitewashed walls of the cell the imprisoned Tommy will usually drive dull care away by writing criticisms of the officer who passed sentence upon him. Evidently solitude sharpens wits considerably, for most of the writing on the wall shows a wonderful power of self-expression. Sometimes the monotony is varied by a few drawing and caricatures.

On one of the prison walls amid all the would-be humorous comments one finds a little human tragedy. A soldier after giving number, name, regiment and length of service, says:

"Came home after eighteen months. Found wife eloped with a Russian. Got drunk. Went mad. Bashed two M. P.'s (military policemen). Sentence fifty-six days. Marriage is a lottery; I've drawn a blank. God knows! Happy is the chap who has drawn a prize."

The hen is now doing a skip-stop stunt on the nest circuit.

THE MOUNTAIN LION IS EVERYTHING THAT'S MEAN

(Chicago News)

"I have respect for most of the animals that infest the hills," said the old mountain guide. "Bears are both amusing and instructive, and the more a man knows about them the more he feels like taking his hat off to them."

"Of course, coyotes are ornery critters but they don't bother people much. They'll steal chickens when they have a chance, but so will some men I know, and we don't denounce the whole human race because some of its representatives go out after dark with lanterns and gunnysacks. I always feel sorry for the coyote, it is so blamed friendless. And then it has a sort of apologetic look about it, as though it blushes to be on earth realizing its own unworthiness."

"The wildcats are bad medicine and there are oodles of them in evidence in the wilder districts. They are not often seen by tourists in the summer but when the tourists go back home from their vacations the wildcats come forth from their secret and swarm around everywhere. They are ugly and vicious and mean, but I respect them for their grit. I believe they have more cold, raw courage than any animal on earth. Find a wildcat in a trap and it will drag its wounded frame along to meet you and put up a scrap. You can get a club and pound it to death and it won't give back an inch, but will fight to the last gasp. Any other animal, when trapped, will try to get away if it sees you coming."

"The most uncalled for animal in the world is the mountain lion. I have been around these hills forty years and have always been wondering who called the beast a lion and why he did it. The real lions have good grounds for damage suits and should engage a lawyer."

"The mountain lion is everything that's low down, underground and mean. All other critters have some sporting blood in them, but it has none. If it comes upon an unguarded bunch of sheep it will kill every one. Same way with calves or colts or any other defenceless animal. It never tackles anything its size."

"I have heard many men, including hunters, arguing as to whether a bear could whip a mountain lion of equal weight. It's an interesting question but it probably never will be definitely answered, because a mountain lion never will fight a bear while he can get away, and at getting away it it in a class by itself. The lion should at least hold its own with a bear. It's as strong and quick and its claws cut like sickles, but it's too yellow to fight anything more aggressive than a sheep."

"The yell of this beast is the most blood curdling sound ever heard by human ears. There's no describing it. You have to hear it once to appreciate it, and then you'll have nightmares right along for three weeks."

"In forty years I have known but two instances where mountain lions attacked men. It happened in both cases that the men were armed and handy with their guns and the beasts were killed. They both had ulcerated teeth and must have been suffering agonies. This probably affected such brains as they possessed and made them dippy. No sane mountain lion ever attacks a man, but will burn the landscape getting away."

THE ETERNAL FEMININE CAME TO THE FRONT

(New York Sun)

The Woman Who Saw has a neighbor with two attractive small children a boy and a girl whom she is bringing up in a most sensible fashion according to wise ideas of her own.

"It is all nonsense to imagine that there is any fundamental difference in the natures of a little boy and his sister," she scoffs impatiently. "I am bringing up my children exactly alike with no absurd notions."

So the little girl romps and climbs trees and the little boy plays dolls to his heart's content, and as there is nobody around to laugh or tease everything is harmonious.

But the other afternoon when the Woman Who Saw dropped in to take dinner she found the two children seated rapt with admiration before a tiny fairylike visitor who had recently come to live in an apartment across the hall. She was dressed in sheer embroidered white with a big pink bow in her hair, and it was this crowning touch that enthralled the souls of the sensible lady's children.

At least the little girl could stand it no longer and going across the room to her parent she whispered loudly "Mother, I want a pink bow in my hair." The little boy followed and in confidential tones expressed a similar desire.

"Very well," agreed their mother unconcernedly, and going to her room she returned with a bit of pink ribbon which she arranged in a coquettish bow over the left eye of her son. After which, feeling quite as grand as their guest, the children played happily together, and the Woman Who Saw looking on with interest marvelled at the wisdom of her neighbor. "Of course she is right," she said to herself, "their tastes are exactly alike, so why shouldn't they be?"

After a while, however, the new little girl went home and the sensible mother prepared her own children for bed. Untying the lavender cravat that adorned her son's hair she folded it and put it away, but when she touched the pink bow the little girl started back and cried out, "Oh—don't take it off yet."

"All right," replied the reasonable parent, determined to treat the whole matter as of no importance, and the children were tucked into their respective beds.

It was hours later, when the Woman Who Saw was saying "good-night" to her hostess in the hall of the apartment, that they were startled by the sound of a weary childish sigh. Tiptoeing to the nursery door, they switched on the lights. The boy

HUNS HAVE SET FIRE TO DOCKS

Amsterdam, Oct. 7.—Some wharves and docks at Bruges have been set on fire by the Germans, according to the frontier correspondent of the Telegraaf. The Germans have removed their guns and coast defence materials from Knocke, and have destroyed the sheds, he says.

The entire garrison at Moerkerke has been withdrawn and work at Zeebrugge has been stopped, while civilian workers have removed a large number of anti-aircraft guns mounted six miles east of Bruges.

At Ghent stores are being hastily loaded by the Germans.

was seen sleeping like the blest, but the little girl was propped against the white bars of her crib so exhausted she could hardly hold her eyes open.

"What is the matter, Nancy?" her mother asked sternly, "Why haven't you gone to sleep?"

"I'm so twaid I'll mash de pink bow," explained the youthful daughter of Eve wearily.

An expression of absolute helplessness came over the sensible mother's face, and the Woman Who Saw took her departure in a thoughtful mood, deeply pondering the mystery of the eternal feminine.
