BRITISH PARLIAMENT AGAIN AT WORK

PRICES WERE HIGH DURING AMERICAN CIVIL WAR

Hot House Encouragement Gave New Life to American Manufacturers--Stress on the Poor People Was Partly Relieved By Bond Issues -- Prices in Richmond During the Year 1864

Specie payments had been suspended almost every where towards the end of 1861; but the price of gold was but 102 1/2 at the beginning of 1862. About May its price in paper currency began to rise. It touched 170 during the next year and 285 in 1864 but the real price probably never went much above 250. Other articles felt the influence in currency prices. Mr. D. A. Wells, in 1866, estimated that prices and rents had risen 90 per cent since 1861, while wages had not risen more than 60 per cent.

The duties on imports were driven higher than the original Morrill tariff had ever contemplated. The average rates, which had been 18 per cent on dutiable articles and 112 per cent on the aggregate in 1860-1861, rose before the end of the war to nearly 50 per cent on dutiable articles and 35 per cent on the aggregate. Domestic manufacturers sprang into new life under such hothouse encouragement; every one who had spare wealth converted it into manufacturing capital. The probability of such a result had been the means of getting votes for an increased tariff; free traders had voted for it as well as protectionists. For the tariff was only a means of getting capital into positions in which taxation could be applied to it, and the internal revenue taxation was merciless beyond precedent. The annual increase of wealth from capital was then about $550,000,000; the internal revenue taxation on it rose in 1866 to $310,000,000, or nearly 60 per cent. The stress of all this upon the poor must have been great but it was relieved in part by the bond system on which the war was conducted. While the armies and navies were shooting off large blocks of the crops of 1880 or 1890, work and wages were abundant for all who were competent for them. It is true then, that the poor had paid most of the cost of the war; it is also true that the poor had shared in that anticipation of the future which had been forced on the country and that when the drafts on the fu-
