MEMBER FOR GLOUCESTER MAKES PLEA FOR UNITY

Acadians of the Province Want to Live in Harmony with people of Different creeds ---Are Loyal to the British Empire--- Government Policy Praised by Young North Shore Member---Lessons of the Great War.

Following is the synoptic report of the excellent speech delivered in the Legislature on Wednesday by Mr. Robichaud of Gloucester:

MR. ROBICHAUD felt that it was his duty to participate in the debate and thereby contribute to a full and frank discussion of matters affecting the welfare of the province. He had listened to criticism from hon. members opposite which had been directed at the government, particularly at the hon. premier and the hon. minister of public works. Fault had been found with the hon. premier because of his youth, and it had been said that the hon. minister of public works was a member of the Dark Lantern Brigade. At the present session, however, he had been pleased to hear hon. members opposite speak in terms of commendation of the efforts being put forth on behalf of the province by the hon. minister of public works. He (Robichaud) had participated in the debate on the budget last session, but had overlooked one matter and that was to congratulate the hon. leader of the opposition on the sportsmanlike manner in which he had accepted defeat. He also wished to extend his congratulations to the hon. premier on the able and successful manner in which he had administered the affairs of the province.

An hon. member opposite had spoken of the necessity of having reforms made in the election act. The proposal coming from that side of the House, seemed to be quite in order as those who sit to the left of the Speaker realize that elections in the future will be cleaner than in the past, and that it will no longer be possible for them to raise such large campaign funds as they had at their disposal in former times.

The policy of the government to inaugurate a system of good roads throughout the province was a wise one and he believed would be strongly approved by the people. In his own county good roads had been practically unknown until last year, when the policy of the government had gone into effect. Some roads had been built in his county which he believed would last for 50 years, and even after he had disappeared from the stage of life he believed they would stand as a monument to the wisdom and progressive policy of the government.

When the whole world was plunged in the greatest perplexity of civilization it was befitting to find the people of New Brunswick involved in questions which are of supreme interest to the human race. The people were seized of the gravity of the situation and were responding to the call of the hour with a patriotism second to none. By responding to the immediate needs of the Allies in whatever shape or form the people were showing the best stamp of patriotism. It was the duty of the government to prepare means for the future welfare of the people, as it should not be forgotten that the great war would have its consequences both good and bad. How could we expect the same conditions to exist in the future as we did before the war. He believed that the decrepit and mutilated nations would arise from the depths to which they had been carried by this conflict and attain a higher degree of civilization.

He could see where the 20th century would culminate into greater achievements than those which marked the 19th century and those achievements would consist not of great inventions, but a complete reformation of the human conscience. The people of New Brunswick would have to keep pace with the rest of the world and to do so they must rise from the depths to which political and social dissensions had carried them in the past and live for higher ideals. There should be no more room for dishonesty in public life and when he spoke of political dishonesty, he did not alone mean political abuse such as the misappropriation of public moneys, but he embraced those who were so weak as to make unpatriotic political capital. He wished to warn the public press of the province as well as a few of the public men that there should not be any room in New Brunswick for minds which attempt to create ill feeling between the different elements of population. He had been pleased to hear the hon. leader of the opposition whom he admired for his broadness and fairness of mind, state from his place in the House that he had no control over the press of the province, but he hoped the hon. gentleman would put a stop to certain utterances made by newspapers supporting the party of which he was the leader. Such utterances could do his party no good and were a dangerous menace to the welfare of the people as a unit. All should remember that the key to success in this province was unity among the different races constituting the population. They should remember that all were living under the same conditions and all boasted of being true and loyal British subjects. Speaking for the one hundred thousand Acadians of the province he could assure the House that their greatest aim was to live in perfect harmony with other nationalities and creeds. The loyalty of the Acadians to the Empire was just as sacred to them as their faith and as sacred as their love for their vernacular tongue. He could well remember that when he had learned at his mother's knee to honor his God, he had also learned to revere as a beloved mother "La bonne reine Victoire."
