STORY BOOK DETECTIVES ARE VERY WISE

Can Analyze the Ashes of Cigar and Perform Other Remarkable Stunts.

(Chicago News.)

"The story book detective," observed the visitor, "always has a lot of special knowledge. He can analyze the ashes of a cigar and tell just what it cost and what sort of a band it had around it. He can pick up a button and describe the suit it came from and the variety of suspenders the owner wore."

"There's a good deal of nonsense about that sort of stuff," said the chief of police, "but there's truth in it, too. The more a detective knows the better for him. The first class sleuth absorbs all kinds of information and some of it is likely to be useful any day."

"When I was a boy I had to earn my living and I had experience in a dozen different trades. I worked in a sawmill and a woolen mill, in a village store, on a farm and at various other occupations. I didn't stick to any one of them long enough to learn much, but the little I did learn has been useful in my police work a score of times."

"One of the first things done in the operation of making cloth is to run the wool through a machine called the picker. Before running it through, however, it is sprinkled with lard oil. After this the wool goes through the carding machines and I operated a set of these machines for several months."

"The combination of lard oil and wool makes a peculiar smell like no other fragrance I know of. It is very penetrating. It soaks into your clothes and your hide and hair and you can hardly get rid of it without boiling yourself."

"Years afterward I made my debut as a sleuth in a western town. There wasn't much high class crime that would give an ambitious young man a chance to distinguish himself, but the cops had been worried for a long time because they couldn't locate a robber who had been entering business houses at night and getting away with the contents of the cash drawers."

"These robberies had been going on so long that the police were feeling foolish and the newspapers were joshing them heartlessly. There was not a man on the detective force who wouldn't have given his halldome to get that burglar."

"One night, just before I went into effect as an officer, the robber had a narrow escape. He was seen leaving a store by the back door. The cops chased him and shot at him, and tried to hypnotize him into stopping, but he got away. However, he dropped his hat in his flight. The police got busy with the hat, but it seemed a hopeless job trying to locate the owner. There were a million lids just like it in that part of the country."

"When I went to work the chief told me he'd give me half his kingdom and his daughter in marriage if I'd get that robber, and handed me the hat as being the only clue. I examined it narrowly and lifted it to my nose and

PURLS OF THOUGHT.

Two plains, two purls—
Oh, look-it, girls,
I've gone and dropped a stitch!
Two plains, two purls—
Oh, goodness, girls,
I wonder which is which!

Two plains, two purls—
Oh, tell me, girls,
Does this far seem all right?
Two plains, two purls—
Oh, heavens, girls,
It looks to me a fright!

Two plains, two purls—
Oh mercy, girls,
I've lost my count again!
Two plains, two purls—
Oh, darn it, girls,
I love to knit for men!

smelled it. Where had I known that queer rancid aroma? Gradually the memory came to me, as I stood there sniffing.

"I asked whether there was a woolen mill near. Yes, there was one a few miles down the river. I went there and got my man, a chap who worked in the carding room and helped out his meagre wages by tapping the tills in town. That's one instance of special knowledge."

I wonder what's wrong with my Tea?

My! This certainly
IS good
Tea

The woman on the left bought some "cheap" tea. You can see she's not pleased. She's sorry now she tried to save a few cents by buying the "cheap" tea.

How different with the woman on the right. The fragrance of her tea tells her how good it is. She paid a few cents for Red Rose Tea than the other woman paid for her "cheap" tea—and besides Red Rose will prove more economical in the end!

Because of the rich flavor and vigorous strength of the Assam teas of which Red Rose consists, it will make 250 cups to the pound, or 25 cups of a cent a cup. So cheap that the very best can afford it, so good that the rich can find it more
