OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

STRAWBERRIES.

Strawberries and French Toast.
One box strawberries, six teaspoon-fuls sugar, six slices of barley or bran bread (French toast), one cup of milk, one egg, four tablespoonfuls mazola oil or 3 tablespoons melted butter.

Crush the berries, add sugar, beat the egg, add to milk, dip bread in the milk and egg. Fry a golden brown in the butter. Serve with the crushed berries.

Strawberry Sandwiches.

One cup strawberries, four tablespoonfuls sugar, ten slices of brown or bran bread, five tablespoons drawn butter. Mash the berries, add sugar; cut bread very thin, spread with butter, then with berries. Place a buttered slice on top; cut in narrow strips. Wrap in oiled paper.

Strawberry Sherbet.

Two quarts of strawberries, two cups of sugar, two lemons, two pints of water, one pint of whipping cream.
Put strawberries through a fruit strainer. Add one cup of sugar; boil water, lemon juice and the rest of the sugar for 20 minutes. Cool; add the strained strawberries to the cooled liquid. Freeze 30 minutes. Let stand half an hour before serving.

FOOD BOARD FLASHES FOR FEMININE FOLK

Refuse to deal with any grocers, fishmongers, butchers, bakers or other tradesmen who have not yet secured a license from the Canada Food Board.

"How am I to know?" you ask.
The easiest thing in the world.

Every dealer has to display his license number on all stationery, in-voices, etc., so that you can readily ascertain whether he is licensed or not.

It is now against the law for the various trades to operate without a license from the Canada Food Board.
The same applies to public eating houses, and women can help by refusing to patronize them unless they are duly licensed.

Analysis of Poisons.

As the season advances, careful study should be given to the use of poisons for spraying purposes. The best way to keep the pests from feeding on vegetables you want for yourself is to feed them with poison.

One of the easiest ways to apply poison is with a whisk broom. Of course there is the spray pump, but the whisk is cheaper. When used dry the poison should be dusted on by mixing it with air-slaked lime, sifted ashes or dry road dust.

Use one ounce of powder and two ounces of paste in six quarts of water or Bordeaux mixture. Put the powder in a bucket and stir in enough water to wet thoroughly. Then it will mix evenly into the rest of the liquid.

Paris green is more expensive and does not mix with water so well as arsenate of lead. Furthermore, it will burn plants if it does not have two or three times its weight of lime added to the water. Used in Bordeaux it does not need the extra lime. Use a half ounce of Paris green and two oz. of lime in five gallons of water. Keep well stirred so as to spread the poison evenly.

A CHILD OF THE BATTLEFIELDS OF FRANCE

Grim Philosophy of a Little Girl Whose Home Had to be Evacuated More Than Once.

(Chicago News)

It is in my heart to tell you, you whose children are safe at home, of what a French refugee child said to me today, on the street of this little town, as she trotted cheerfully beside me, her yellow hair shining in the May sunshine. You will need no word of mine to point the tale.

I met her as I came out of the hospital where the American soldiers lie so patiently.

She was dressed in a black apron and a pair of shoes with wooden soles and when I smiled at her she smiled back at once, trustingly, and fell into step beside me.

"Bon jour, madame," the child said politely.

"It's fine weather this evening," said I. "Do you suppose the boche airplanes will be around again tonight?
This is the customary casual remark now in Paris.

The child gave me a look of appropriate scorn.

"What does it matter?" she said.
"They've been bombing us regularly for two years in the Pas de Calais where I live. I don't pay attention to it any more. One might as well die at home as anywhere else."

As she said this last her voice took on the infinitely wise tone of a child repeating a phrase often spoken by its elders.

"You are not at home here, then?"

I asked her.

"Oh, no! We've been evacuated twice. At first they sent us to Montdidier and then we were evacuated to this town. But my mother doesn't like it here. The townspeople are not polite to us. You should see the place we have to sleep! If my father could get back from the front he'd be ashamed to see us here. But we shant stay here. We're going to Bordeaux soon."

"But Bordeaux is far away, a day and a night in the train."

She shrugged her shoulders and was silent for a moment. Distance did not interest her. Her wooden shoes clattered on the stones. Then she looked up suddenly.

"They killed my little brother in an air raid," she announced, as she might have said that she had a new dress.

It was a piece of information just like another.

"Yes," she went on, "they hit him with a piece of bomb and killed him.
My mother wasn't hit, but she was sick afterward. I don't wonder. Just think, to have raised him so far and then to have them get him."

Again I heard through her, the mother speaking.

"How old was your brother, child?" I asked, the May sunshine gone suddenly cold.

"He was 6 years old, madame," she answered.

Again she was silent for a moment, and when she spoke there was a sudden dullness in her young voice.

"My brother had such pretty hair," she said. "Yellow curls. Lots of them.
And he had lovely yellow curls. And when the shell hit him they were all filled with blood."

Then her voice changed once more,

War times are teaching us that there is no economy in buying the cheapest goods nor the fancy high priced ones.
We are depending on the solid values of the good standard brands—the brands that were good in peace time and have doubly proved their worth in war time.

Red Rose Tea—costing today only about 1/4 of a cent per cup—is one of the solid war time values that anyone can afford—and that everyone will enjoy.

It is truly a war time tea

became free and joyous.

"Here's the market, and I've come to buy a piece of candy. I'll leave you now."

"But tell me, dear, before you go, how old you are yourself."

"Oh, I'm 7 1/2. I'll be 8 before long.
Bon jour, madame."

And she bent her own yellow head over the sweets with a little laugh.
Of such is the conversation of children in France today.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

A man in New York says he can tell a woman's disposition without marrying her. He is either the only man of his kind in the world, or else he's a liar.

A western paper gives this good advice: "Brag about your wife while she is alive. Don't wait for us to say it all in the obituary."

"Work or fight" is merely the translation into timely terms of the familiar American sentiment, "fish or cut bait."
