

CONSERVATION OF GAME AN IMPORTANT MATTER

Plan Proposed to Establish Sanctuaries for Game in the United States--Breeding Places for Deer and Elk Should be Protected--May Have to go Back to the Tall Timbers for Meat Supply.

Mr. Hoover predicts a meat famine which will last for years. As an offset to this, Rensen Crawford writes in Collier's, it is proposed to establish game sanctuaries in the national reserved forests, where all kinds of big game may breed unmolested, and bills legalizing such sanctuaries are pending in congress.

The general movement for a great increase of killable big game in America has come to be termed throughout the country "the Hornaday plan."

It gets its name from Dr. William T. Hornaday, director of the zoological park in New York. Dr. Hornaday is foremost among the naturalists of the country, vice president of the United States Army league and trustee of the American Defense society. For more than twenty years this champion of big game has been sounding a warning to the American people that wild life was becoming extinct and that some day our desolated forests would be looked to in vain for relief from a scarcity of home-raised meats.

Had congress and the legislatures of several states awakened to a realizing sense of the importance of protecting wild life ten years ago there might still be a food problem before the American public today, but it would be less of a calamity than it now is. Dr. Hornaday, a conservative, accurate man, estimates that several million head of big game would be available for the market annually if proper precautions had been taken a decade ago. He gives it as his opinion that even at this late day, if well-protected breeding places for deer and elk were provided throughout the vast area of the wild timber and brush lands of the United States, at least a million bucks might be slaughtered annually, leaving the does to go on multiplying the denizens of wild life in our forests.

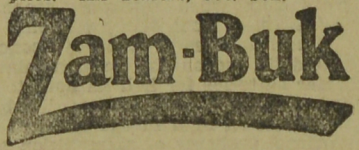

This story of literally living on the fat of the land is no fable; this idea of going "back to the tall timber" to get our daily meat is no daydream. Where did the thousands upon thousands of Indians get theirs? It is a widely known fact in the southern and Zam-Buk will soon take the pain out of a scald or burn. Mrs. Albert Smart of 279 Harrison Ave., Winnipeg, writes: "I upset a pan of boiling water over my arm and foot. As I was wearing slippers my foot was badly scalded. The pain was intense and almost immediately a huge blister formed, covering the top of my foot."

APPLY AT ONCE

"My husband got some Zam-Buk and applied it at once. The relief was really wonderful. Very soon the burning pain was ended and the inflammation drawn out, and continued applications completely healed the scald."

Zam-Buk is also best for eczema, ulcers, bad legs, blood-poisoning and piles. All dealers, 50c. box.

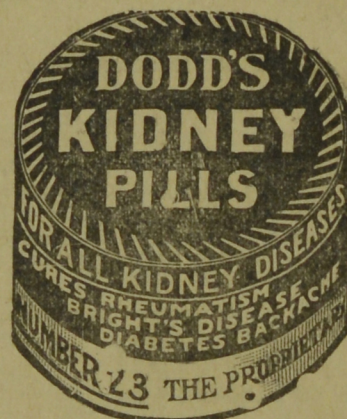

states that many tenants of the cotton lands live three months of the year on rabbits, squirrels and birds without buying a pound of western raised meat. It is an equally widely known fact that in the extreme northern and western states land owners who are fortunate enough be within range of our decreasing tribes of big game live by their rifles much of the time. There is nothing visionary in the Hornaday plan for food relief.

Efforts Appreciated.

The Duke of Portland, chairman of the British Committee for Agriculture, Relief of the Allies, has cabled to His Excellency the Governor General expressing the gratitude of his committee to Dr. James W. Robertson and the Canadian committee, for the results accomplished in February in raising funds. Recently the British committee sent to France many thousands of fruit trees to repair those deliberately destroyed by the Germans in their retreat. All over Canada the work is in the hands of Provincial Agriculture and Women's Institutes.

Michael Cuff of Carmel, Penn., who in 26 years has mended 107,103 pairs of shoes with the same pegging hammer, recently broke the handle.

A SHEEP FOR A PET

(Boston Record.)

We believe it humanly possible to love dogs and respect sheep. We believe it possible to love a sheep. Difficult, but possible. We have the warmest and most patriotic admiration for the admirable work of our national food administration. But in the name of sentiment, sanity and sobriety we challenge this statement in the Weekly Bulletin of the Food Administration:

"A sheep is just as good a pet as a dog."

We picture the tired agriculturist, or even the tired business man, coming home after a day of raising vegetables or prices, greeted at the door by the caresses of the house sheep. We try to visualize the smile of affection on the tired man's face as the gentle sheep wags a woolly tail, trots into the dining room, library or kitchen, according to circumstances, and lies down before the fireplace or range, his nose between his paws, his eyes glowing with fellowship.

It is night. The master and mistress of the house have retired. The children are tucked in bed. There is the subdued sound of several clear consciences in repose and respiring gently. Hark! The door creaks! It is Bill the Burglar. He has a look of low cunning and a black bag. He advances with these and with stealth. But "Baaaaaa! Baaaaaa!" The faithful watchsheep is on the job. A sheep as good a pet as a dog? Bah! Baa.

SAVE AND GROW STRONG

Garden thoughts are burning in the suburbanite's brain. The snow shovel is tucked back out of sight in the cellar, and the equipment of spade, hoe and rake is looked over. Seed catalogues and garden books are the evening's reading. There's going to be a great crop of backyard gardens this year. How much can a family save by this?

One family in England recently told a London paper its experiences. There are six in the family. For 14 weeks they have lived entirely on raw vegetable salads of grated turnips, parsnips, carrots, cabbages, beets and on fruit salads and porridge and toast. They say they are all healthier and stronger than ever before. They use no tea or coffee. They grow their own vegetables. In other words, it has cost them close to nothing for their meals during the past 14 weeks.

We cannot all do that. Probably most of us are sure we could not live on that fare. But the story shows what can be done under necessity. We do not confine ourselves to that diet, but in the fact that someone has there is a big hint applicable just about now at the beginning of the garden-planning season.

WHICH?

"This bulk tea is the best I could buy at the price, Mrs. Brown, but I believe you will like Red Rose better."

"We use Red Rose at home and like the rich flavor. My wife says it goes further."

Hundreds of grocers are making statements somewhat like this.

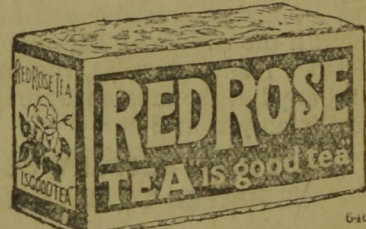

They have sold Red Rose Tea for many years and have found the quality so good that they use it in their homes.

Most grocers naturally like to make an extra profit on their bulk tea, but they cannot help recommending Red Rose Tea because they know it's worth the price.

They know it goes further because it consists chiefly of the teas from Assam in Northern India, the strongest, richest teas grown anywhere in the world.

Red Rose tastes better and goes further.

THE DAILY MAIL

This paper has a special value to the local advertiser, as the majority of its readers are in this city and the immediate surrounding country.

Our Advertising Rates will be found decidedly reasonable in view of the results obtained.

PEOPLE READ ADVERTISEMENTS

They are trying to buy as wisely as they can. It is necessary that they should.

They are eager to know what the local merchants have to offer, and good live advertising is interesting reading to them.

Most of our enterprising business men have already realized this fact and their advertising appears regularly in the Mail.

If you are not a regular advertiser in the DAILY or SEMI-WEEKLY MAIL, you are overlooking an opportunity that no business man in this locality ought to be too busy to appreciate.

In spite of increased prices of materials and the upward tendency in rates for all services in the business world, the subscription price of the Mail has not been increased, and we are daily booking new subscribers, which means more readers and customers for our advertisers.

Ford ONE-TON TRUCK

COUNTRY-WIDE interest and comment have followed the recent appearance on the market of the new Ford One-Ton truck.

It is now possible to get a serviceable commercial car of one-ton carrying capacity that also embodies the desirable qualities of Ford sturdy construction and low up-keep expense.

The Ford passenger car has proved itself the most economical and serviceable automobile in the world. And this latest Ford model differs from the standard Ford chassis only in being constructed for heavy-duty service.

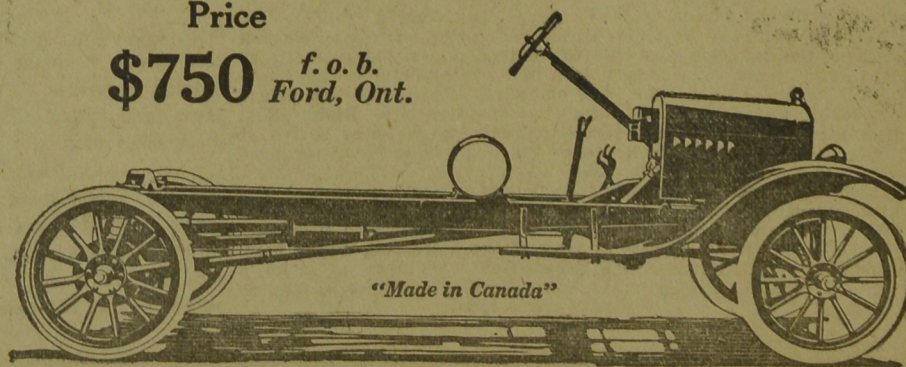

The frame is built of heavy steel, and the wheel base has been lengthened to 124 inches. A worm drive is used, and rear wheels are equipped with solid tires. Front tires are pneumatic. The standard Ford motor, transmission and ignition are embodied in the truck.

The Ford truck is supplied as a chassis only. This allows the purchaser to equip his car with any style of commercial body to suit the individual requirements of his business. It is an easy matter to get this equipment, for many of the leading body builders of Canada already have developed standard bodies of the various styles, made specially to fit the Ford truck.

Ford service has contributed in no small way to the reputation of the Ford car for day-in-and-day-out dependability. This same universally satisfactory service is available to owners of Ford trucks—an important thing to consider.

Realizing that a Ford model of the popular one-ton capacity would find immediate favor, this new truck is announced. Don't fail to see it on exhibit at the Ford service station in your town.
