GEIMS OF POETRY

OH, YOU BANYAN!
There's a man, they say, out Hanwell way,
Makes booze, by Garden's Brook;
And his friends go there, ostensibly,
The speckled trout to hook.
But they never bother the finny tribe
Nor hunt on the Hanwell hill;
But they bask in the shade of the
Banyan tree,
And there they drink their fill
Of the booze that is filtered in charcoal black.
To take out the fusel oil
That always comes out with the alcohol
When the still begins to boil.
For the wise old guy that makes the stuff
Is versed in the chemist's lore;
He also studies alchemy—
He's science to the core.
And when you ask for stout or ale,
Brandy or rye or gin;
He'll put on that wise old smile of his
And hand it out with a grin.
If you stand at night, in the pale moonlight
As the cool breeze whispers by
You can tell when you sniff the glorious smell
That a whiskey still is nigh.
No hound of the law has yet found out
The man with the sly old grin;
No sleuth can trap him while on the job
For strangers can't come in.
Inspectors and cops may fume and rage,
It matters not how they try,
There'll be a few drops in this good old town,
Till the Hanwell still goes dry!
