UNEXPECTED ABILITY BROUGHT OUT BY WAR

Story of a Member of the Princess Pats — A Doughboy Who Could Speak Four Languages.

(Popular Mechanics.)

In the latter part of September, 1914, a laughing, light-hearted boy just out of his teens, enlisted in the Canadian Light Infantry—the famous "Princess Patricia's." He knew nothing whatever of military science, and even less of discipline, and was one of the rawest recruits at Valcartier training camp.

In the summer of 1915 this same boy commanded his regiment in the fiery hell of the second battle of the Ypres salient. He received his "D.S.O." after this was over. As a reward for the capture of Paschendaele Ridge, eight months later, he was given an honor bar to his D. S. O. and promotion. At present he is an acting brigadier general, and doubtless will attain that rank shortly. His actual rank is that of major, but by his brother officers and all of the rank and file he is known affectionately as "Hughie" Niven of the Princess Pats. The civilian mind is naturally loath to look upon war as anything but a monstrous business, but the fact remains that war—for the individual—is a business in which promotion pays both in honor and in income.

Often at a draft camp qualities or accomplishments will be discovered in a man which he did not even suspect were valuable and these lift him to a commission immediately. One striking example of this was a Cleveland youth who went with the first draft. A week after he arrived he happened to mention to the first sergeant of his company that he was quite familiar with all the country in the region of Verdun, having spent four years in this part of France. The sergeant told his captain, and the latter immediately summoned the young man.

A few days later a summons came from Washington demanding the presence of the private immediately in Washington. Upon his arrival there he reported and was sent into an inner room to wait. A half hour later he was called and in the assemblage into which he was projected he recognized many faces of men often pictured in the papers.

"You have said that you have driven your own automobile around the Paris-Verdun region for four years; that you know every foot of the roads; and that you speak four languages fluently besides English. Are these things true?" The spokesman looked seriously but kindly at the young man.

"Yes, sir." At the huge blank sheet of paper and a crayon were produced. The spokesman indicated a chair before the desk on which the paper was spread. "Now indicate roughly," he said, "the position of Verdun and all towns within a twenty-five-mile radius, and show the main roads leading from one to another."

The young man sat down immediately and set to work. As the blank map began to assume recognizable shape, one of the officers in the background asked a question in French. The map-maker answered without looking up. Then came queries in German, Scandinavian and Dutch, all of which were answered quickly.

As the drawing went steadily on the officers crowded closer and closer to the map. When at last the crayon stopped the spokesman led the young man into the waiting room. Fifteen minutes later he was called back.

"You are to be transferred immediately," he was told. "You will report to General Pershing!"

The young man did so, and was given a commission on the private staff of the general.

THE OUTLOOK NEVER MORE PROMISING

London, Aug. 10.—Surprise is expressed along with gratification in the comment among newspapers on the continued advance of the Anglo-French force in the Somme region. No offensive in which the British army has participated, it is remarked, ever recorded so much progress on the opening day.

The employment of a large number of light fast tanks, the "hippets," with strong forces of cavalry, is regarded as giving entry to a new feature of battle. The military correspondent of the Times, referring to the remarkable speed developed by the whippets in keeping pace with cavalry forces, sees a future when heavy infantrymen will have small light tanks, while swarms of airmen will take the place of the cavalry and light infantry.

The extraordinary employment of aircraft in pursuit of the enemy is also remarked. The service they rendered obviously was of the utmost military value, which it is hoped is not out of proportion to the losses. The number of airmen officially reported not returned reaches the high figure of 50. A further success for the Allies is regarded as depending to a large extent upon the recapture of the important railway town of Chaunés.

Nowhere is any attempt made to disguise the fact that a great German effort to retrieve the losses is inevitable. Meanwhile the commentators hold that there is every reason to regard the outlook as never more promising for the Allies since the war began.

ASTONISHING SPEED MADE IN BIG ADVANCE

Tanks Did Magnificent Work, But the Movements of the Infantry were Quick and Decisive.

London, Aug. 9.—The Daily Mail's correspondent at British headquarters says the hardest fighting occurred on the extreme northern and southern wings of the British advance, the passage of the river Luce and the capture of the southern woods particularly proving very tough operations, which checked the advance a while.

But notwithstanding these checks, the advance was kept with astonishing speed all along the line. The tanks, which did magnificent work, helped the speed, but special credit belongs to the training and dash of the infantry. They smothered the German infantry as our gunners smothered the German gunners. Their movement was quick and decisive. The enemy had a hard time to remove his guns.

It is reported that all along the line field guns were overrun and a particularly large group of them were captured north of the Somme, near Chilly, where escape was impossible, owing to the sharp bends in the river Somme. More guns and of course machine guns were captured than can be catalogued in a day or two. Some few of them were used against the enemy quite early in the day.

Enemy Artillery Extinct. The feature of the day was the extinction of the German artillery. It answered to our barrage rather slowly and patchy. It was up to the standard at some places, but it lasted a very short time in the first degree of excellence.

One isolated shot deserves mention. It hit the engine of one of our ammunition lorries, but it did not explode a single shell or hurt the driver.

As the sun conquered the mist, our airmen saw scenes of complicated confusion much further afield. Batteries and strings of vans scampered off, and in the middle of the hurry our airmen with machine guns and bombs took all advantage possible.

A Big Surprise. All the prisoners agree that the attack was an overwhelming surprise and that full advantage was taken of it by the assaulting troops.

The German defences, at any rate behind the front line, were for the most part very inadequate. The old zeal of digging in and going to the ground seems to have been lost. Nor did most of the Germans fight well in the centre. The prisoners were very numerous, though an extremely few were taken on the front lines, owing to the devastating effect of the four-minute barrage on the indifferent defences. The proportion of men killed was large, and at one place the numbers were quite unusual.

In the course of time the ubiquitous person who begins every remark with "Say, listen!" will be with us no longer. That will be just as well.
