London.-A Canadian officer wounded early in the war, came to St. Katharine's Lodge, one of the American Red Cross orthopedic hospitals in London, to have his left arm made over. The elbow had been shattered. The officer was given a choice of having a weak movable elbow, or a strong stiff one. Without hesitation, the Canadian chose the stiff elbow, and astonished the surgeons by asking that the arm be made perfectly straight, so he could use a hunting rifle and a billiard cue.

"What you need to get hold of is optimism," the customer said to the optimist myself; I was a skeptic and got to be an optimist no fellow has stung me on a deal, borrowed my watch, punctured my tire or even as much as stolen my eggs."

"Oh, it's a great thing, all right, agreed the tobacconist. "My wife is an optimist and it has done her a lot things I can't understand.

It had skipped that.

"It was a laundry tub on the back porch that had overflowed. Mrs. Walks had thoughtlessly gone away and left the faucet turned on in the tub; but they hadn't worried; they had been optimistic all day until they splashed into that water when they got home.

"The Glubberts had spoiled the entire day fancying a flood at their house with the furniture floating around. I can see that the optimism of the Walkses was a good thing. If they had suspicioned what was going on at home their outing would have been spoiled. Still, if they had been suspicious, they might have persuaded the Glubberts to curtail the trip and thus got back home before the flood reached the inside of the piano, and that would have been a very good thing.

"On the other hand, if the Glubberts had been true to form with their or ency, they might have prolonged the drive still longer, which would have not have arrived home in time to save
