THE SEASON THAT SUITS

We find in winter little charm;
It takes a sprinter to keep warm.

Then torrid summer makes a stir And we wax glummer than we were.

But cheer up, chappie, here's our call We can be happy in the fall.

The bachelor who never grows about the weather would make a good husband of the meek and lowly variety.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

RAG THRIFT.

It is Now Well Worth While to Save Frayed Towels and Old Stockings and Worn-out Silks.

Housewives were getting dreadfully reckless about cleaning cloths and dishcloths, dust cloths and all the other family of "rags." We found that it was hardly worth while to treasure old stockings and frayed turkish towels for this purpose when we could buy splendid new cloths made specially for the kind of work they were designed to do for a mere pittance. The 5 and 10 cent stores had all kinds of good cloths of this sort and we so far forgot the thrift of our grandmothers that we burned the old rags in the stove and got new ones for household use.

But if you have gone to buy any cloths of this sort lately you know the sad conclusion to the story. What used to be nice thick floor cloth has dwindled to the size of a baby's wash cloth and the poor little dishcloth would make you weep for pity. The price hasn't gone up, but the cloths have gone down. So it is back to the old rag bag for the efficient housewife.

The best of all possible dust cloths are made from silk. For one thing it doesn't shed lint; moreover, it gives up its dust very readily when washed and it does not scratch. Now silk dusters seem like an extravagance. But when you come to look over your little collection of "rags"—for you will have to save them all now—you will surely find some pieces of old silk that are past redemption. We haven't time these busy days to make many silk rag rugs or curtains. Grandma, who used to make them, is knitting socks for soldiers and so we don't have to save them for her. However, old or discolored your bit of silk may be, it will do nicely for a duster and it does not matter what color it is either. It should be washed in strong soap and hot water solution or boiled till it gives up its color.

In making any rags ready for use it is well worth while to have your sewing machine threaded up loosely with white thread and then it will be a matter of only a minute or so to run the edges of your silk duster through the machine to secure from fraying.

Stockings make the best kind of floor cloths, especially for oiling fine floors, but they should be used in several thicknesses. Slit the stocking down the back seam, cut off the toe portion and put two or three together and then run them through the machine in a zigzag way to hold them together.

Cotton sacks that cereal, sugar or flour has come in make nice cloths to have on hand to put over food that has been cooked and must stand till it is cooled, but should be boiled in soapy water, rinsed and dried before being used.

FOOD BOARD FLASHES FOR FEMINE FOLK

An enterprising Hamilton woman recently had an inspiration to organize a sale of the meat by-products which usually go to the grease tank to be rendered down because there is no market for them. She secured the cooperation of the packers and was able to offer the meat at low rates. The proceeds went towards Christmas parcels for the men at the front. The saleswomen were volunteers from various women's committees at Hamilton.
The sale was absolutely unique and the products went like wildfire. On the next day 1,400 pounds, and the third
day 900 pounds, although it rained hard all the time.

It is a continuous line the Food

The "personal shopping" method counts here. There are no delivery expenses

It is conservation of the most ap-

WHY THEY DON'T CARE

(New York Sun)

The Woman Who Saw had gone to a beauty parlor to have her hair sham-pooed, a luxury that she still permits herself occasionally, even in war times.
On this occasion, instead of having to wait or to make an appointment for some other day her name was smilingly recorded and she was told that she could be served immediately.

On either side of the long hall at the back that extended between the rows of small compartments each equipped with all the mysterious apparatus guaranteed to paint the lily whiter or to restore the lost charms of youth, sat idly in stiff chairs the dozen or so lady assistants. One of these was assigned the Woman Who Saw, and as she conducted her customer into one of the tiny rooms and enveloped her in the voluminous white apron she exclaimed sombrely: "The war sure has hurt our business."

"Really?" murmured the Woman sympathetically. "Why is that? Don't people have their hair washed any more?"

"Taint that" replied the beauty lady, gloomily. "It's just that all the boys have gone off to the war and the girls don't care what they look like."

Almost any married woman will produce bread, cake or pie if her husband will furnish the dough.
