

THERE IS NOTHING FOR THE LIVER

SO GOOD AS Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills.

They will regulate the flow of bile to act properly on the bowels, and will tone, renovate, and purify the liver, removing every result of liver trouble from the temporary, but disagreeable bilious and sick headaches, to the severest forms of liver complaint.

They are small and easy-acting, do not gripe, sicken or weaken like the old fashioned, nauseating, griping purgatives.

Mrs. A. Kirk, 53 Yorkville Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "I have tried and tested Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills, and have received good results, for which I am very thankful. I took them for liver trouble. I came out of the hospital on May 3rd, last, after having had a serious operation which might have been saved had I taken your remedy sooner. I have given some to my sister for biliousness and sick headache, and she has found great relief. A lady who lives in my house has started to take them. I will do my best to recommend them to all my friends."

WARTIME TERROR

The frank young woman sighed. "Well," she said, "I suppose I'll have to go. We've dinner guests tonight and I must get home before Jack arrives with his men friends. If I don't I'm afraid I'll find his hosiery hanging on the piano, mantel, or—"

"On the piano!" came a chorus of feminine voices.

"Is that the newest thing in interior decorating?" asked an amused woman.

"If you can call it decorating," replied the frank woman. "Anyway, I assure you it is entirely original with Jack, and the funny part of it is I don't dare protest. All I can do is sneak around and remove the socks after he has gone out or hurry home in the afternoon if I happen to leave the house first in the morning."

"Why don't you call up the maid?" suggested a woman.

"Oh, she has strict orders not to touch them. I suppose Jack has actually bribed her."

"You haven't told us why."

"I'm coming to it. I'll admit I deserve it, but the fact is that because of my knitting, Red Cross work and the rest I just can't find time to darn Jack's socks, and when I do have the time I can't remember."

"Oh! Oh!" came the chorus again.

DIFFICULTIES OF WIRELESS WORK BY ARMEN

Aviators Now Carry Light Outfits for Sending Wireless Messages 'Mid Vibration and Noise.

Somewhere in France, June 10.—Every pilot in the British air service is now a trained wireless telegraphist. The field of use of the wireless in connection with airplanes is, however, limited by two factors—weight of the apparatus and the noise and vibration of the engines.

Heavier than air craft cannot remain aloft as airships or balloons can, with engines stopped for the better reception of long distance wireless messages. But the wireless has enlarged the field of use of airplanes in warfare. Messages transmitted by the "cavalry of the air" now keep headquarters in touch with every visible movement on the part of the enemy. It is, however, in connection with artillery that wireless is chiefly employed. The comparatively light sets required for the transmission of messages a distance equal to the range of the large modern gun is but a small load for the average two-seater airplane.

The difficulty of receiving 'sound' signals in the air will be apparent when it is stated that conversation between pilot and observer is impracticable, without the use of special "loud-speaking" telephones, on account of the noises made by the engine, the hum of the vibrating rigging and the rush of the air. The effect of vibration, apart from the noise, is perhaps the greatest difficulty to overcome in designing the receiving apparatus.

Signals sent when flying across the ground station, or when turning, are not so clear as those sent while flying directly toward or away from the receiving station.

"That is inexcusable! You owe him that at least. I always do my mending—Sentiments to this lofty effect in shocked tones were heard in different parts of the room.

The frank woman laughed. "Oh, I suppose you are all perfect!" She swept the room with a challenging look. Everybody present except the amused woman hastened to declare angelic efficiency.

The frank woman went on: "I really think it awfully clever of Jack and feel pretty sure that it will cure me in time, but the immediate process is rather embarrassing.

"I was out early the other morning, spending several hours in the park and on the golf links, and I wound up by bringing an old friend and her guest home to lunch. When we entered the living room three of Jack's socks hung gracefully from the top of the piano and a half dozen others suspended from the top of a bookcase. My friend asked: 'Christmas again so soon?' Here her guest eyed me curiously. I whisked the socks out of the room. 'It's that horrid dog again,' I explained. My friend laughed. 'Some agile dog,' she said.

"Another night I was late for dinner. Jack had brought Prof. Illington home to dine, and they were already at the table. I hurried into the dining room and was seated before I realized that a whole row of Jack's socks dangled from the top of the buffet. My appetite left me. I signed to the maid to remove the socks, but she only shook her head and looked at Jack in a frightened way.

"Every time the professor's eyes lighted on the hosiery he'd blush and look at his plate. It was awful! And Jack was having a perfectly good time! But I know that the professor thinks there is something wrong with me mentally. You could tell he felt sorry for Jack.

"However, I've got to stand it till I can reform."

The amused woman rose, hurriedly crammed things into her bag. "Girls, I'm going to fly," she said excitedly. "Last night at the Serve Nothing club Jack had all of our husbands in a group telling them something, and I've an idea that it was this sock scheme. They were laughing uproariously and my husband wouldn't tell me what it was. And tonight we're entertaining the president of the 'Win the War' club. By by!"

One by one the women made excuses for a hasty departure. The frank woman chuckled as she slipped her knitting into her bag and drew on her gloves.

"I predict there'll be a resurrection of darning needles in this town," she said. "Dear old Jack will never know what a regular uplifter he has been."
