GOVERNMENT MAY CONTROL ALL PHYSICIANS

Washington, D. C., July 19.—The government is about to assume control of the entire medical profession in the United States to obtain sufficient physicians for the fast growing army and at the same time to distribute those remaining to the localities or services where they are most needed for civilian work.

This mobilization is to be accomplished either by enrolling all physicians in a volunteer service corps under pledge to accept whatever service military or civilian, is assigned them by the governing body of the corps, or, if the voluntary scheme is not successful, by legislation providing for drafting them into government service. Medical officers of the government believe compulsory conscription will not be necessary.

Organization arrangements for the volunteer medical service corps already have been made and enrollment started in a few States under authority of the Council of National Defense. Instead of enrolling in this corps only those physicians not suitable for military service, either because of age, physical infirmity, dependency, or institutional or public need, the government is expected shortly to throw open the membership to all physicians and to bind them with a pledge during the present emergency to accept service, military or civilian, wherever, whenever and for whatever duty he may be called upon by the Central Governing Board.

Under this project, the army and navy would take those physicians and surgeons best fitted for active duty and who can be spared from civilian requirements. At the same time the government would maintain a continuous survey of the country and assign physicians to those communities in which there are too few practitioners.

The practical operation, officials believe would cause little of this relocation, however, since physicians who are needed in certain communities, hospitals, schools, or other essential civilian services would not be commissioned in the army.

Conferences of physicians were held today in Washington and a number of other cities to discuss the operation of the voluntary enrollment plan.

WINTER RYE BEING GROWN AT EXPERIMENTAL FARM

Looked Upon As a Crop Well Adopted to New Brunswick—Was Well Headed Out on July 1st and May Give a Yield of Thirty Bushels to the Acre

With the call for increased production of bread stuffs, there should be careful consideration among our farmers of what they can do to meet the emergency. Wheat, of course, is the most desirable grain for breadmaking and for supplying bran and middlings for stock feeding, but in many parts of New Brunswick this grain has not been a sure cropper, nor is it likely to be until more is learned about the prevention of disease and other methods necessary to insure a good crop.

When the country was first settled nearly every farmer could and did raise his own wheat flour, though yields of grain were not always satisfactory, but in later years, with the advent of cheap flour from Western Canada, it was found much more profitable to grow other grains and buy flour. Consequently, in the central and southern parts of the province but little wheat has been grown and as these parts were large importers of oats, being the surer crop, were generally grown to the exclusion of wheat. On the Upper St. John and along the Northumberland Straits, however, wheat has been consistently doing well.

To test the adaptability of this crop to New Brunswick conditions the Experimental Station at Fredericton has been growing winter rye and up to date, with very satisfactory results. On the 15th September, 1916, an area that had grown a soiling and silage crop of peas and oats was seeded to winter rye at the rate of about seven pecks to the acre. This started well that autumn and after dying down during the winter came strong in the spring of 1917 and in July ripened a crop of thirty-four bushels per acre on straw from five to six feet in length. This crop was not pastured at all and the stand was rather thin.

On September 17, 1917, some of the seed of the above crop was sown at the rate of two bushels per acre upon land which had grown a crop of flax that year. This was pastured rather severely by lambs in October and November, but the crop came strong in the spring of 1918, the plants stooling freely, from five to ten good stalks coming from every plant. This crop on July 1st, has reached a height of from five to six feet with good heads and gives evidence of yielding over thirty bushels of grain per acre.

Rye flour makes a dark but sweet and nutritious bread and at the present time is the main cereal food for millions of people in Northern Europe. From the evidence gained at the Experimental Station, Fredericton, and the experience of various farmers throughout the Province, it would seem very desirable that New Brunswick farmers who are not successful with wheat should try a piece of rye for next year. As long as the supply lasts, seed of winter rye may be obtained at the Experimental Station, Fredericton, N. B. Land from which an early crop of potatoes is taken will be very suitable or a clover sod ploughed immediately after haying and kept well cultivated will give a crop. Any kind of sod land that is fairly well drained can be fitted by ploughing as early as possible in August, harrowing thoroughly immediately and afterwards at least once a week until seeding. In most cases it would insure a better crop to spread from ten to fifteen loads of manure per acre and disc it into the soil. If only long green manure is available it might be spread on the sod and ploughed in.
