

CONSTANT PAIN AFTER EATING

The Tortures of Dyspepsia
Corrected by "Fruit-a-lives"

ST. MARTIN'S, N.B.

"For two years, I suffered tortures from Severe Dyspepsia. I had constant pains after eating; pains down the sides and back; and horrible bitter stuff often came up in my mouth.

I tried doctors, but they did not help me. But as soon as I started taking 'Fruit-a-lives', I began to improve and this medicine, made of fruit juices, relieved me when everything else failed."

SURGEONS ARE UNSUNG HEROES OF THE WAR

Somewhere in France, May 28—One of the unsung heroes of the war is the military surgeon. No man has been harder worked in the tremendous fighting of the past few weeks, and his work has been in most cases far from pleasant.

There is not the same romantic stimulus for the medical man that there is for the infantry of artillery officer. It is one thing to dash about under fire intent on killing or being killed; it is another thing to dash about under fire and take the same risks while being calmly attending to those with wounds from which all other men as they pass avert their heads. "Thank God, I am not a doctor," said an officer who had been detailed to inspect a number of improvised casualty clearing stations along the front during a recent attack.

The regimental surgeon in the British army has in his charge the well-being of more than a thousand men. When there is no fighting on, he has plenty to do. He has to strike a happy medium in discouraging the faint-hearted, who come to him as a means of obtaining a fortnight's rest, and in holding out a helping hand to those who are in real distress. If he is too lenient, the commanding officer begins to ask whether he intends to deplete the whole regiment; if he is too harsh the junior officers and men lose patience.

The doctor is the only officer in the regiment, however, who is the fortunate possessor of a cart, but this leads to numerous complications. There are some thirty-odd officers in the regiment, and each one of them has some few trifles which must go in that cart. If he is weak enough to take them, the cart is overloaded and before long breaks down and precious medical stores have to be abandoned. If he refuses to take them, his position in the officers' mess becomes well-nigh unbearable.

The doctor doesn't ride, but "foot-slogs" it with his regiment through the same mud, the same wind and rain, and the same perils. His duties are not confined to caring for the ill and injured. He must supervise the sanitation of camps and billets, ensure the purity of drinking water, keep a lookout for outbreaks and epidemics, maintain a continuous campaign of inoculations and vaccinations and fill out a long series of records and army forms. He has to do his utmost in the light of his special knowledge to maintain the health of his unit and any remissness on his part may lead to a serious diminution in its strength.

In billets he has the added duty of playing the role of medical attendant

A SPLENDID WITHDRAWAL FROM AISNE

With the French army in France, May 28—The German offensive made only slight progress today. Seeing the heavy masses opposed them, the Allies gave way in the centre and in some places the enemy crossed both the Aisne and the Vesle.

The Allied command perceived, when the German offensive began that resistance of the lines then held would be impracticable and effected a withdrawal toward stronger positions in order to give the reserves time to come up. The enemy found both flanks were holding however. The Germans pushed forward as quickly as possible with all the troops at their disposal. The allies gave way, fighting hard. Both the French and British troops on the flanks fought with extraordinary courage and succeeded in holding on, notwithstanding the great odds against them. In some places they were outnumbered ten to one.

The enemy now has the Aisne at his back and may find himself in an awkward position when the Allied reserves come into action.

NATURE'S LAW WILL DEFEAT THE GERMANS

John Burroughs Says Forces of Progress are Bound to Crush Prussianism.

(Chicago News)

While bands boomed for the liberty loan in the loop, America's oldest poet-naturalist, whose first visit to Chicago was in 1856, sat in a Beverly Hills House and meditated on the war that all the noise was for. Outside past the windows threaded the spring rain. Inside, John Burroughs, friend of Emerson, Whittier, Alcott and Walt Whitman, pulled his white beard and offered his philosophy as war comfort:

"They all crush Prussianism—that fine army we are sending out. The speed with which they do it depends on getting ships. But they will do it. Always there are more forces on the side of progressive life than against it. And while good will not come out of the war, it will come from the power of human nature to recuperate. When our armies return they will melt into the armies of peace—easily as after the Civil war.

"Universal Training Valuable"

"Universal training after the war would be valuable for the discipline it gives. But we should beware of the increase of militaristic spirit and war toward decreasing armaments.

"This war weighs heaviest on old men. I think of it when I rise at 6 and when I go to bed at 9. I have no relatives in the war. But I feel that they are all my relatives."

The "back to the soil" movement encouraged by the food and gardens campaign is appreciated by the poet.

"More American families should be raised on the farms. The life in the open air, the discipline of regular tasks breeds a power in the farm child. To benefit by this power, all professions and businesses must recruit from the farms.

Sees Harm in "Movies"

"Then the children are kept away from the movies. I hate to see the young people going to the movies. I fear films will generate superficial minds. I went not long ago to see 'A Trip Down the Amazon.' The film raced along so fast, I saw nothing. I wanted them to stop and go slowly while an anaconda was winding itself about a tree. No.

"As for plays, what satisfaction is there to see silent ghosts gesture their way across a screen? If I go to a play I want to see flesh and blood men and women interpret life for me."

But the war did not remain long out of the poet's mind.

"I hope to live to see the end of it," he said. I live regularly. Perhaps I shall get my wish. In my winter home on the Hudson or my summer shack in the Catskills I write from nine to twelve. I work in my garden or saw my wood in the afternoon. I earn my fire. At night I can look into the flames without blushing. I don't drink ardent liquors. I don't smoke. I despise to have men about me who smoke. Their flesh exudes the odor of nicotine. And I love the smell of the fresh air."

Ten thousand women of New York city are to be enlisted in a women's police reserve corps.

to the villagers as all the French doctors in the country districts have gone to the front."

PARISIANS JOKE WHILE RAIDERS DROP BOMBS

People Hesitate to Obey Orders and Retire to the Cellars --- Anti-Aircraft Batteries Made Things Lively for Huns --- Crowds Collect as the Great Dragon Balloons Go Up

(Chicago News)

Yesterday was sultry and after sunset the streets and sidewalks radiated the heat absorbed during the day but the air was so pleasant that Parisians hated to retire, according to the new customs, so soon after ten o'clock. Many were still outdoors when the first warning of a possible air raid came and then a real alarm was given a few minutes later at 10.40.

Crowds formed around the great black dragon balloons, as the Germans call them, which appeared suddenly in the avenues and boulevards or rose from the gardens and parks. When one of them was held an amused crowd formed a circle around it and when it was released and mounted swiftly upward there was a chorus of admiring "ahs" followed by clapping of hands.

Then came the screeching wail of big sirens, followed in a few minutes by the violent pounding of a barrage fire. The air and the moonlight were so pleasant that nobody wished to obey orders and retire into cellars. Many did not, but risked being wounded by shrapnel bullets by remaining outside. I drove through the great Bois de Boulogne, which, being unlighted, was quite dark, except where the moonlight penetrated through the foliage. Beyond the park I climbed a high hill, where I looked down on Paris and half of its closest suburbs. Near by anti-aircraft batteries were lively, as were many other elsewhere in making the air an uncomfortable place for any invader.

Protection shells burst over and around the city at every altitude, twinkling like shortlived stars. There were a score of amused people on the hill. They stood in the most exposed position chattering constantly. One of them standing beside me on the stone base of a high fence said: "The other night when some bombs fell over here a fellow was so excited in getting down in a hurry that he caught his coat on the points of the iron fence and tore the garment to shreds." That was a great joke.

The noisy chattering crowd was silent for a moment and then distinctly as if very near came the sound of the throbbing of a motor. White beams like great dazzling clubs reached out suddenly from the darkness aimed in the direction of the sound. The beams disappeared again and again. Then began a concentration of fire and a hundred bursting shells twinkled for an instant. A few seconds later there was a bright flash of flame which seemed to move then burned brightly for a brief period and disappeared. One Gotha had been shot down in flames.

As for the rest it is similar to other raids—the pounding sound of the "archies" (anti-aircraft guns), bright yellow bursts, and then the crashing of bombs, often followed by a long reverberation, and in the brief silence the occasional note of an enemy motor. Such is an air raid seen from a hilltop.

REST AT THE CHATEAU LAKE LOUISE

Amid Swiss Scenes in the Canadian Pacific Rockies—windings framing million dollar pictures of Peaks and Glaciers.

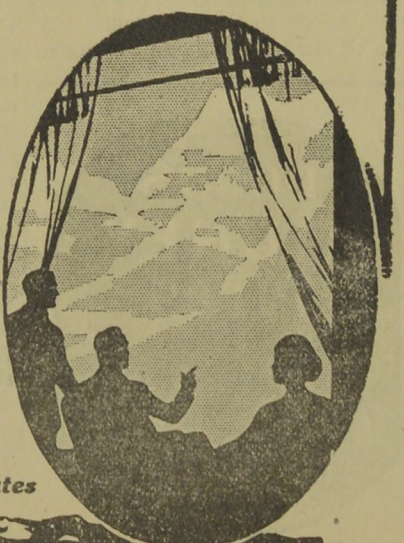

"In the lake, ever changing, is Beauty herself, as nearly visible to mortal eyes as she may ever be. The water, beyond the flowers, is green, always a different green. Then a little wind awakes in the distance and ruffles the surface, yard by yard, covering it with a myriad of tiny wrinkles, till the lake is milky emerald, while the rest still sleeps. And at length the whole is astir and the sun catches it and Lake Louise is a web of laughter, the opal distillation of all the buds of all the Spring."
