BRITAIN TO GO ON TEA RATIONS

London. —Horrors of war continue to pile up. The latest and most excruciating of all is about to hit the English people—they're going to be put on tea rations!

Gosh, how we hate the Kaiser! Lord Rhondda, the food controller, has decided that customers beginning July 14 must register with retailers for the purchase of tea throughout Great Britain. He is considering whether this order should be accompanied by one apportioning the amounts of tea to be sold.

In some parts of the country the fragrant beverage already is rationed the weekly distribution in those places being 1½ ounces per person. If the rationing is made nation-wide the limit probably will be raised to 2 ounces.

The price is also to be fixed at a maximum of 66 cents a pound, in order to prevent retailers from attracting trade away from their rivals by reducing the price. If it is found possible to reduce the price this will be done.

Under the present system tea is distributed on the basis of the trade done by retailers and wholesalers in the year ended June, 1916. Owing to the movement of the population and other causes this method has been found unsatisfactory, and in order to adjust supplies to local requirements the registration system was decided upon. By this scheme a customer may buy tea only from the dealer with whom he is registered.

Old window shades with rollers, fastened to the top shelf in the pantry so that they may be lowered and raised, will keep light, dust and flies away from the food.

CITY OF DENVER, COLORADO, HAS APPOINTED A CHAPLAIN

The Metropolis of the Rockies Takes on a New Departure --- Mankind Must Be Saved From Its Woes and Sins---Proposal to Name Chaplain Came From the Mayor, and City Council Readily Responded---Has Already Justified His Appointment

J. W. MacMillan in Journal of Commerce.

Denver, Colorado, has a city chaplain, appointed and paid by the city council. Think of it! Denver is one of the chief cities of the United States of America, one of whose cardinal principles of government is that there shall be no alliance between church and state. If my memory does not betray me it was in Colorado, not so long ago that a certain geography was forbidden to be used in the public schools on the ground that it contained religious sectarian teachings. The offensive teaching consisted of the statement that God made the world. Denver is a busy city, the metropolis of the Rockies, the centre of a recent labor war of extraordinary violence, one of the homes of radicalism and luxury. And Denver has appointed a city chaplain! It sets one thinking.

Dr. Edward Devine in one of his addresses, said, "Religion is the greatest force in the world, but it is not yet social." It is individual, largely because it is separatist. It is because there are so many churches that none of them stands before the world preeminently as a minister to human needs and wrongs. It is obvious that a social policy cannot be completely framed unless the social opportunity exists. And no church, claiming the allegiance of only a portion of a community can become fully the friend and helper of all the community. Vice crime, misery, overwork, overcrowding, the delinquency of children, the conflicts between masters and men, are all matters which pertain to a community as a whole, without reference to denominational lines. Religion cannot become adequately social under the present conditions of division and separation between the churches.

A Unifying Force

The history of the human race from the earliest times reveals religion as a great unifying force. Any scrutiny of mankind today displays the religious motives still unabated in force. As Sabatier said, mankind seems to be incurably religious. All our inventions and discoveries, all our mechanizing of life, has not lessened man's sensitiveness to the mystery of the world behind the world. Give religion a chance, as is done in the case of the chaplain of a battalion, and it still shows its ancient power over the hearts of men. The tragedy of Christianity is its sectarianism. The Roman church shows its appreciation of the need of unity in calling itself Catholic. The Protestant bodies show a similar appreciation in each claiming for itself the spirit of catholicity. Of course, when we estimate life in the only fair way, which is by its activities, no one church is seen to be catholic. However cosmopolitan and universal it may be in spirit, however it may long and pray and strive for united effort on the part of all Christians the undeniable fact is that there is no such united effort.

To Save Mankind

What can be done to unite the forces of religion so as to make them effective in saving mankind from its woes and sins? I ask this question with no thought of the welfare of the churches. I am mindful of the purpose of this column, which is the welfare of humanity, with compassion or favor for no institution, of whatever sort. And, even from the religious standpoint that is the right view to take. When a church would save itself it betrays its task. The law of its life is sacrifice for others. It must be obedient as an institution to the gospel it preaches to individuals.

There are three possible lines of action by which the handicap of separatism may be assailed. One of those is the conversion of all other churches by some one. This is a favorite programme of some enthusiastic religionist, but thoughtful people, who see how little from age to age the lines of division are altered will set it aside as impracticable. The second possible method of uniting religious endeavors is by confederation. Something of this sort is being accomplished, but very little. The experiments of uniting religious bodies have gone further in Canada than anywhere else on earth and we will know how difficult and disappointing have been the results up to the present time. Life is too short for this method. There is, however, a third method, which is that adopted by the mayor and city council of Denver, of the acceptance of the common denominator of denominationism, and acting within the field thus determined.

Social Service

It is happily true that there is a huge territory which is common ground to all who are in any sense Christians. It is the field of social service. For many years, in many different ways, members and leaders of all sorts of worshipping bodies have operated in dealing with the simple and plain needs of mankind. There is hardly a village but has now or has had at some time in the past some joint effort in collecting funds for the relief of some calamity, or the solving of some local problem of poverty or vice. Wherever there is an Associated Charities such co-operation is consistently and steadily carried on. In such a Conference as met a fortnight ago in Kansas City there were united in problems priests and pastors, rabbis and ministers, with a host of social
