meeting but at the same time he was very sorry because of the fact that many of the older faces with which he was familiar had passed to a better and a higher life. He asked that all present co-operate in the future of the Church and help in its advancement by a strong united effort. He hoped that Congregations would not attempt this work alone but would unite and all pull together. He referred to the early condition of affairs at the beginning of the war how the British forces lacked co-ordination and hoped that out of this the Protestant Churches would learn the need of co-operation in the Great Forward movement. He was followed by Rev. Dr. W. Harrison, who is supplying in the Devon Methodist Church during the illness of Rev. A. D. McLeod. Both Dr. Harrison and Rev. Z. L.
