WOMEN IN THE NEWS. Doris Keene Back in America With an English Husband—Strike of Milliners in New York.

Miss Doris Keene surprised Broadway last week by arriving quitely from England with her husband, Basil Sydney, and never even calling for a re-porter. Miss Keene, who achieved fame in England by playing in "Romance" for three years, will go soon to California, where the famous play is to be filmed for American audiences. She has been absent from America since early in 1914, and says she's having a fine time showing her husband all over New York.

Mrs. Anna Brannon, leading the milliners who are still working, despite the strike in New York, issued a statement last night saying the real purpose of the strikers, almost all for-eigners, is to drive out American women and force employers to turn over control to them. "As American born citizens we want to the public to know that we have no intention to recognize the right of anything born in Europe to tell us when, where and how we are

Mrs. William Wright Vaughan, nember of the New York higher cir-les, whose husband is a member of the New York Stock Exchange, has sued him for separation and wants him o divide his great income equitably. She says he has beaten her, insulted her and otherwise made her life un-happy, taking delight in humiliating her before the help.

Mrs. Minnie P. Ebberts, wife of the wner of the Brooklyn baseball team will not get the divorce right off, as the court yesterday, after hearing the case and listening to all about one Mrs. Grace Slade Nott, concluded to see if there isn't collusion between the Ebbetses. The condition of affairs has lasted for seven or eight years and the judge thinks he will think a while.

Mrs. Robert Goelet, who became such in Paris at the American Church ast week, was Mme. Riaboochinsky, former wife of a Russian diplomat, and has recently signed a contract to appear in a play called "Experience," though probably the Goelets will balk.

Mrs. Goelet can speak five language not all at once.

The following poem, so appropriate to the part taken by Great Britain and the United States in the late world war, was written by an American some

Wherever a human breath is breathed Or the bones of dead men lie, The ruddy warmth of the English flag, Has flamed against the sky;

Wherever Columbia's stars have shown Since ever their course began, The lowly ones of earth have known They stood for the rights of man.

And proud are we of the Saxon blood Of the centuries which are gone, And proud that the flags ride side by might be settled.

In the Twentieth Century's dawn. So who shall tear at the lion's hair? Who pluck at the eagle's feather?

If the sum of our might be firm for the right

As the two flags fly together?

For not as a Gog and Magog shall The Saxon sons be twined, To sweep the earth with a sword of

Or blast with a blighting wind; When the two flags fly together, Then the wolf of war must cease To howl her sinister note and prowl On the world's preserves of peace.

Should we measure our height in the scale of life By the length of tooth and claw?

Should we beat the brow to a narrow ridge And broaden the brutal jaw? Or shall we use our swelling thews With the war wolf held in tether, Till aeons shall praise the blelssed When the two flags fly together?

Thermopylae and Marathon Were glorious words in Greece But the Greek lives only for us today In the letters and arts of pea Roman sword and the Roman shield Have rolled in rust away, But the Roman roads are paths of In many a land today.

There were Marlboroughs, there were Wellingtons,
To further the English fame,
But heap them up by the score and name. And shall we pave the wrath of the cyclone's path,

Or the shine of the harvest weather? Shall we choose the course of love,

When the two flags fly together?

For we—are we always guiltless? And you—are you always sure That your children's children will

It was well, and their plans were
