SESSION OF PARLIAMENT MAY SOON BE ADJOURNED

Members Seem to Find it Difficult to Put in the Time—May Adjourn Until After the By-Elections—Special Indemnity Session is Not Proving a Success—Peace Treaty Again Under Discussion.

Ottawa, Sept. 8.—An early adjournment of parliament is said to be under consideration by the government. It was easy to call the "indemnity" session but it is not so easy to keep it going. When the wheels of the parliamentary mill are turning, some grist must be brought to it or the movement of the machinery would be an uncontrollable farce. How to get approval by parliament of the government ratifying the peace treaty formed some excuse for part of the session's work, but it becomes apparent that even with one sitting a day to spin the thing out, it cannot be made to look like a real session. By hurrying things on a bit for a while and then adjourning until after the by-elections, it is hoped that time and circumstances will produce a situation that will give the cue for another programme of legislation that may help to make the session give out a noise like a real session. The government is aware that the public has its eyes opened to the "second indemnity" feature of the session and feels that it is up to it to show some action to change that impression if possible. Those who advocate the adjournment believe that adjourning on top of a controversy about the peace treaty would help the government case. There is opposition, however, to the idea of a long recess on the part of members who urge that many projects defeated last session, or allowed to drop, can be revived and fought over again. They argue that dividing the session would make it lose any status it derives from the discussion of the peace treaty.

Treaty Discussion Again

The house, today, again switched back onto the peace treaty, and it is hoped that the debate will finish today or tomorrow at the furthest. The character of the proceedings may be judged from the fact that the speech presumably one of the big speeches from the government point of view delivered by the Hon. A. L. Sifton who was on the job at the conference from the start to the finish would have ranked rather poor as a political speech delivered from the back of a railroad car and did not take any longer to deliver it. It seemed to have been composed as he went along and it certainly gave the house very little new light on the question.

The debate was opened by D. D.

Chief Fire Dept.

MacKenzie who charged to make it appear that the prime minister was anxious to make a party question out of the treaty. He intimated that the fact that the defeat of the treaty in the house might mean the defeat of the government also would not be an insupportable catastrophe. He pointed out that both in the South African war and in this one we had acted on our own initiative and by the will of parliament, but the intention of the treaty was that the free will of the people of Canada shall not prevail hereafter. We are not independent because our legislation is subject to the will of the British House of Commons. Lloyd George had stated in the British house that the treaty was already signed and did not require ratification by us. The plenipotentiaries from Canada were appointed on the other side of the water. They were the plenipotentiaries of the king and as such they signed the treaty and that was the end of the matter.

Mr. Sifton said there had been no ratification by Great Britain, and he made much of the rather circumstantial point that Canada was the first government to have submitted the question to parliament. The big point was the advance made in that the treaty was being submitted to our parliament although he admitted that it did not make a particle of difference what attitude we took on the matter and everyone knows that it will be ratified by us after the specified amount of talk has been indulged in.

Mr. Devlin interpolated a rather important and embarrassing question when he asked what nations in particular had objected to Canada taking part in the deliberations.

Mr. Sifton replied: "All five powers. Dr. Beland remarked that the treaty was the most momentous event in the history of the world but one would never think so from listening to this debate.

He agreed with the other speakers on the opposition side, however, that Canada's position in the matter was a very subordinate one and with little or no exercise of autonomy. He pointed out several of the anomalous positions in which Canada might be placed hereafter as a sort of attaché of the league of nations. He saw great danger of possible complications with both Great Britain and ourselves as members of the league unless we should absolutely surrender our will and viewpoint to the mother country.

Quebec Member Takes Floor

Pacaud, of Megantic, made a short but eloquent speech in the evening, taking the familiar line that it was not necessary for us to ratify the treaty as it will not make any difference what our stand is. He was not opposed to the league of nations but we could have accomplished what we desire by other means than by these which may drag us into war. It is only designed to further the principle of imperialism. By adopting section ten we are taking away our own valuable prerogative and mortgaging our freedom while getting nothing in return. He would have liked to have seen some settlement of the Irish question. He feared the effect of the treaty would be to conscript our young men to protect foreign territory in which we have no interest.

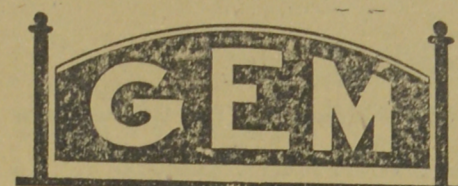

After a protracted sermon by Rev. Mr. Stacy, the member for New Westminster, who was supposed to be speaking on the peace treaty but dealt with nearly everything else including the value of education and the wickedness of the press, the debate was adjourned at 10.40 by Ernest Lapointe. Mr. Stacy reached the high water mark of dullness, even for this debate.

E. K. Spinney, Unionist member for Yarmouth returned to the house today for the first time since early last session when he left to have his leg amputated. He was warmly greeted by the house as he made his way in on crutches.

The premier was not in the house when it opened this afternoon being indisposed and Sir George Foster also was absent through sad domestic circumstances. Lady Foster's condition being very serious.
