NAME OF CYRUS W. FIELD WILL NOT BE FORGOTTEN

An American Who Rendered a Great Service to the World—
The Man Who Laid the First Atlantic Cable—The First Message Transmitted—Many Difficulties Encountered in Connection with the Great Enterprise, but Success Came at Last.

"Europe and America are united by telegraph. Glory to God in the highest; on earth peace, good will toward men," was the first message ever transmitted by cable between the Eastern and Western hemispheres. This was sent by the English to the American directors as soon as shore-to-shore connection was made, but the words had to be relayed and carried over land wires in Newfoundland. The first "through" messages were the greetings which passed between Queen Victoria and President Buchanan on Aug. 16, 1858—sixty years ago.

The victory appeared to have been won at last. There was tremendous rejoicing in Great Britain and in the United States. Enthusiasm over the achievement that had crowned the tireless persistence of Cyrus W. Field spread in fact throughout the civilized world. On the 17th the event was celebrated by New York. The city was decorated with bunting, and bells were rung in every steeple; at night there was a great torchlight procession along illuminated streets. Cyrus W. Field was given a public reception and ovation. As he read, to an immense assemblage, a message that had come under the ocean from his London associates in the enterprise, the cheering of the audience drowned his voice.

At that very moment, somewhere at the bottom of the broad Atlantic, something had gone wrong with the cable but the celebration went on, the jubilation continued; next morning New York, London, and all the world became aware that still another failure, and the greatest one yet, as well as the most disappointing and disheartening, had been recorded against the Stockbridge, Massachusetts,

DEMobilizing GERMAN ARMY

London, Jan. 2.—Gustave Noske, one of the new members of the Ebert government in Germany, is quoted in an interview printed in the Express as saying that the demobilization of the German army is proceeding much more rapidly than was at first believed possible. There are about one million soldiers at the German barracks in Berlin. It is not believed there is much danger from Bolshevism, it is declared.

Yankee, who, like Pick, had boasted that he would put a girdle around the earth.

Inside of twenty-four hours from the time the public was acclaiming Cyrus W. Field one of the greatest men of achievement the world had known, it was questioning even his integrity. On the streets of New York especially on Wall Street, the Atlantic Cable project was denounced as a stock-jobbing scheme. It was insinuated in some of the newspapers, that the messages which were said to have been transmitted through the cable had been concocted to deceive. The promoter of the scheme had to bear the brunt of the abuse, ridicule, and calumny directed toward it. Even his associates in the United States and in England although standing by him bravely and defending his character, began to display indifference toward further prosecution of the enterprise.

Then came the Civil War, and, with it, strained relations between the United States and Great Britain. Millions felt and frequently had good reason for feeling, that electric communication between the Old World and the New would have been immeasurably valuable during the conflict, but confidence among the mass of the people in the feasibility of ocean telegraphy had waned. Other and more pressing things demanded and monopolized attention.

Cyrus W. Field alone stood firm, but he had to be patient and wait. He was certain that time would vindicate him. He was right. The war was scarcely over before he was able to revive interest in his enterprise, and a new company was formed. A cable being laid in 1869 from the Great Eastern, "the monster steamship" of that time snapped when 1000 miles of it had been reeled off. No time was lost in vain regrets. New capital had to be raised. A new cable had to be made. The work went on without interruption. The Great Eastern landed the cable of 1866 safely at Heart's Content Harbor, Newfoundland, on July 27. The cable of 1865 was soon picked up and spliced to a new length. Soon two Atlantic cables were in operation. It was not until then that Cyrus W. Field felt wholly secure.

Said he, when it was given to him to sit down and view the accomplishment calmly: "It has been a long struggle. Nearly thirteen years of anxious watching and ceaseless toil. Often my heart has been ready to sink. Many times when wandering in the forests of Newfoundland in the pelting rain or on the decks of ships on dark stormy nights, alone and far from home, I have almost condemned myself for the folly of sacrificing the peace of my family and all the hopes of life for what might prove after all a dream."

And yet hope led him on. He believed in his undertaking. He believed it was necessary to the welfare of humanity. He believed in himself. Above all, he believed that right would triumph. And he won.

Stockbridge is a little town in the Berkshire Hills, "famed," in the words of Henry Ward Beecher, "for its meadow-lands, for the picturesque valley adjacent, for the quiet beauty of a village which sleeps along a level plain just under the rim of the hills." But famed also, and perhaps, more so as the place from which have issued directly or indirectly, all the Fields, scholars, lawyers, promoters, jurists, financiers, and poets, whose careers embellish the pages of American history. From Cyrus to Kate, from David Dudley to Eugene, they were all dreamers who would not give up before their dreams had come true.—"Christian Science Monitor."
