Years Of Suffering Ended
By "Fruit-a-lives"

112 HAZEN ST., ST. JOHN, N. B.
"It is with pleasure that I write to tell you of the great benefit I received from the use of your medicine 'Fruit-a-lives', made from fruit juices. I was a great sufferer for many years from Nervous Headaches and Constipation. I tried everything, consulted doctors; but nothing seemed to help me until I tried 'Fruit-a-lives'."

After taking several boxes, I was completely relieved of these troubles and have been unusually well ever since". Miss ANNIE WARD.

ANGLICAN CHURCH AND THE BIBLE SOCIETY

work? What say those at the outposts in our mission fields. The famous dictum of Bishop Steeve, of the Universities Mission to Central Africa, described by The Times as "one of the Bible Society's heroes," who consecrated the best years of his life in producing the Swahili version of the Scriptures, is worth repeating. "Our work must be all unsound without a vernacular Bible; and the Bible Society has made this possible to us." Early in 1919 Bishop King, late of Madagascar, the newly appointed secretary of the S. P. G. wrote: "I have worked long enough abroad to know the value of the vernacular Bibles or New Testaments. I do not know what a Mission would do if your Society did not help it. It is an enormous gain to the teaching of Christianity in any country that the best-printed book should be that which contains God's Holy Word." The S. P. G. draws about eighty versions in languages used by their missionaries from the Bible Society, either free or at a mere nominal cost. The Bishop of Madras, the most prominent leader in India's Mass Movement work, says: "It would simply be impossible for the work of the Church to be carried on abroad without this Society's help."

The Archbishop of Canterbury has said: "In supporting the work of the Bible Society we are furthering the purpose of our Divine Lord when He caused the Holy Word to be written, which is the purpose of the Bible Society to spread through the whole world."

The Bishop of Liverpool writes: "If, owing to some great disaster, the British and Foreign Bible Society were blotted out of existence, it is no exaggeration to say that the missionary work of English Christianity would be utterly paralyzed if not destroyed."

These facts speak for themselves. It is estimated that the Bible Society spends on translation, publication and distribution a sum equivalent to about ten per cent of all the Church's missionary outlay. A moment's consideration will show the need of the Society so that in every land, in every man's heart the Word may come with its illuminating, cleansing, transmuting power, even as God's own fire.

(Tomorrow the people of Fredericton, both at their residences, and business offices, are to be asked for aid in this glorious work. Meet the collectors with generous hearts.)

WORTH KNOWING.

To wash chiffon squeeze it well in warm, soapy water until clean, then thoroughly rinse in warm water in which a lump of sugar has been dissolved. This will give a little firmness after being ironed. It is best to dry the chiffon before ironing.

Delicious apple jelly can be made from the peelings of apples. Put the peelings into a jar, cover with cold water and let cook slowly in the oven till the peelings are tender. Then strain, add one pound of sugar for each pint of liquid and boil till it jellies. Each pint of liquid and boil till it jellies.

To whip cream quickly add a piece of oda. You will be delighted at the result.

Money talks and it is in a hurry to say good-by to the most of us.

A New York suicide left a note attributing his downfall to "slow horses and fast women." And, as a matter of investment, there is no combination like fast horses and slow women.

BRITISH PEER IS ACTING IN THE MOVIES

London, Nov. 29.—Another peer has joined the ranks of the Thespians. Lieut.-Col. Sir Simeon Henry Lechmere Stuart has become a film actor. In his younger days he was one of the founders of the Oxford University Dramatic Society, where he played with such well known actors as Arthur Boucher and Holman Clark. The war interrupted his career in amateur theatricals.

He succeeded his father in the title of Baronet in 1891, the seventh of his line. He is a typical man of the world having travelled extensively and having had the edges knocked off when quite young in the Fifth Dragoon Guards, a famous regiment which he joined on leaving varsity days behind. He saw active service during the South African war, was placed on the General Staff as Deputy Assistant Adjutant General and was mentioned in despatches.

Soon after the conclusion of the South African campaign Sir Simeon was instrumental in raising a squadron of the Westminster Dragoons. The squadron complete, Sir Simeon once more featured prominently in amateur theatricals, playing such important parts as Hawkeley in "Still Waters Run Deep," Poo Bah in "The Mikado" and Lord Chayne in "Three Little Maids."

When "Damaged Goods" was put on at the Court Theatre, Sir Simeon played the part of Loches with Fisher White as the doctor.

In 1914 Sir Simeon was in Germany but reached England just in time to volunteer on Aug. 3. He then raised a second regiment of Westminster Dragoons and later commanded an important entrenching battalion at Ypres for a period of fourteen months. He was obliged to relinquish his command on account of a bad dose of gas. On his recovery he again commanded an entrenching battalion, but was obliged to return to England with a bad attack of shell shock.

But still this gallant Britisher was not to be defeated, and after recovery returned to France on the general staff, in which position he served until after the armistice.

With the sheathing of the sword of Armageddon, Sir Simeon once more sought to follow in his pre-war Thes-

A LETTER FROM LETTY.

"The author does not believe what he is writing," continued Theo with conviction. "His editorial does not carry the conviction of the others we have read."

It carried the conviction to me, however, that something has developed that makes Donald think Theo is guilty, and that he is trying to create sympathy for Theo if he is ever brought to trial.

After reading the editorial Theo seemed to sense what it would mean to go home, and he turned to me for comfort.

Isn't it providential that woman has been so fashioned that she loves best and is ready to do most for those that have the greatest need of her? But for our child, I would advise Theo to give himself up and tell all he knows, but I cannot let the faintest shadow rest on the honor of our child's father. And everything depends on the whim of Sallie Saunders. If she would only tell the truth, all would be well. I am anxious to get home and see her. Can it be possible that she still loves the murderer of her father?

Ah, there's the question! Did Emil Baur fire that fatal bullet? Theo thinks he did, and yet some way I have a feeling that someone else was with Mr. Saunders that evening; someone who did not wish to be seen; someone who quarrelled with him and on the impulse killed him.

All these thoughts were racing through my brain as I packed our trunks.

Theo had gone down to the lobby. He was very restless. Five times within the last hour he had come to me and put his arms about me and kissed me—sometimes sadly—sometimes compassionately.

"You are a brick, old girl!" he once said rather brokenly. "I know of no other woman who would stand up to this as you have done."

"Your own mother did it, Theo," I answered, "and I am quite sure that any woman who truly loves would do the same. Why, my dear, do you realize that Sallie Saunders is making greater sacrifices than I for the man she loves?"

"Yes, my dear. She has given up her sense of right always for Emil Baur. She has betrayed my brother, and I have no doubt that she is preparing to go to Emil Baur and to sacrifice you, an innocent man—if it be necessary—to save the life and liberty of the man she knows killed her father."

"I could not do this, Theo, if I thought you were guilty of a great crime. I would stand by your side and help you bear the consequences if I could, but I would not make innocent people suffer for your sin if I could help it."

Theo was silent for a moment and then he strained me closer to him. "Women are queer and wonderful creatures," he said.

The bellboy brought me a letter from Letty at this moment. It read:

"Dear Margot, I am writing this to tell you that I am much worried about your father, for in the last few days he has become very weak. Something that he seems to have found out about the murder that is shaking the entire city has disturbed him as nothing has done since I have known him."

"He will tell me nothing about it, but the condition of his heart is such that whatever is preying on his mind is affecting him physically. Yesterday he was unable to go to the office, and it made him so irritable that even I could not calm him. He kept asking me if I had heard from you, and he seems to have gotten it into his head that you are not in Washington. He told me yesterday that he was sure you had gone to South America. I do not know where he could possibly have gotten this idea, but he was further confirmed in it when I told him that no one had heard from you since you left. I think you had better wire us on receipt of this letter that you are in Washington."

"Eliene and her Major are perfectly and ecstatically happy, at least Major Gordon is. At times I feel that Eliene is a little worried, but what it is I cannot conjecture."

"Robert is expected home from his mysterious visit East today. Your father has been quite concerned over his absence. Seems to think it has some hidden meaning. Of course, he does not say anything, but every once in a while he makes some remark that tells me of what he is thinking. Bless his old dear heart, he is as transparent as running water."

"I think, dear Margot, it would relieve his mind very much to know that you are still in Washington, for I have never seen him so upset over anything as the failure of the police to solve this mysterious murder."

"I miss you, dear Margot, more than you can guess. I want you beside me to reassure me about His Honor. I want him again to look at me and say 'Baby Doll'—some way he has forgotten to say it lately."

"I know it is not because he loves me less, but because he is greatly worried over something that he cannot share even with me."

I had reached this part of Letty's letter when there was a hurried step along the corridor. The door of our suite was violently thrown open, and Theo burst into the room.

"Read, Margot, read this," he shouted, and then, before I could read, Theo, great, strong, vital, virile Theo, slumped to the floor in a dead faint.
