WANDERERS' PROTEST NOT SUSTAINED

Investigating Committee Says Nothing Should be Done to Weaken Power of Rugby Referee.

(Acadian Recorder)

Messrs W. A. Henry, K. C., and J. McG. Stewart, who were appointed to decide on the protest by the Wanderers against Dalhousie have sent their reply to the committee which does not sustain the protest. They say:

As to the smaller ball, Captain Fultz allowed himself to be persuaded by the referee to play the first half of the game with that ball rather than time should be wasted in having the referee measure the ball and decide upon its fitness, and the fact that he made no protest against the referee's suggestion amounted to a waiver of his previous objection. His concluding remark as reported by himself is an acceptance of the suggestion which leaves no room for protest or objection.

This was the only question before the appeal tribunal, but they expressed their opinion, as individuals that nothing should be done which will in any manner weaken or detract from the absolute power of the referee as sole judge of facts and sole timekeeper. In this game referred to they are satisfied that Major Cook discharged his duties with the strictest regard to fairness and neutrality and that his decisions have been properly held. Feeling thus, they would not be justified in recommending that the game should be replayed.

They feel, however, that it is quite clear that the Wanderers are not satisfied that Dalhousie is the better team and the public is by no means unanimous. It would no doubt, they say, be taken as a very gracious act on the part of the Dalhousie executive if they would consent to a further trial of strength, but this is a matter entirely for them to deal with in view of the proximity of their examinations and other considerations which may not be within their knowledge.

FASHION'S FANCIES.

The cascade jabot has returned.

None of the fur coats have belts.

Straight, unbroken lines are favored.

Vestee effects are frequent in fall suits.

Fillet laces will soon begin to decline.

Fall suits show embroidered coatskirts.

Cape wraps are as much favored as ever.

A new type of overskirt is being shaped.

Leather buttons are excellent on tweed suits.

Silk braid embroidery is frequently seen.

Georgette and satin are a new combination.

JACK THE HUGGER.

Jack Frost is such a lucky dog!

The pretty girls he seeks;

And there is never any stir,

No one calls out, "How dare you, sir?"

When he starts kissing cheeks.

YES IT WAS, OLD BUSYBODY!

Mr. Bob Hardin, of Beaver Creek, was here Sunday. We suppose courting was his mission, was it not, Miss Mary?—Correspondence in Jefferson, N. C., Recorder.

Is Being Welcomed

Many old friends are extending warm greetings to Colonel F. E. Barker, who returned to St. John Saturday on a visit from England, coming across on the steamer Metagama. He is a son of the late Chief Justice Sir Frederic Barker and has a large number of friends about the city. Colonel Barker served with the Royal Artillery and seeing service on many fronts including France, Mesopotamia and Gallipoli. Colonel Barker had been in the army before the war.

Mr. R. J. Maxwell of St. John is in the city today on business.

Confessions of an Every-Day Wife

By Idah McGlone Gibson

LIVING A DETECTIVE STORY

I have never cared for detective stories, but I always have admired the ingenuity of their authors. My life had been lived from such a different angle that it never seemed possible for the things narrated in mystery stories to ever really happen.

Yet here I am actually living such a story day by day, hour by hour. And in living this story I found how inadequate was the description of suspense in any tale that I had read.

I began to wonder if it were true that innocent people sometimes were victims of circumstantial evidence.

Theo's face did not reassure me, although I rejoiced that he had determined of his own accord to go back home.

The time before Theo and I were to start seemed interminable. I was again waiting—waiting to hear from Donald—and yet almost hoping he would not wire, as I did not know how I could explain to Theo. But I need not have worried because when Donald did let me know that he had begun to help me it was not told by wire but through the columns of his newspaper.

"Here, listen to this Margot," said Theo this morning, showing me an editorial which I knew at a glance Donald had written. Theo then read:

"The whole city is closely following the accounts of what is being done in the case of the murder of Mr. John Saunders. Everything points to the conclusion that the killing was done by someone on an impulse. No one who knows the few established facts really suspects that the deed was premeditated.

It has however been pretty well authenticated that there was more than one person in the murdered bankers room on that fateful night; someone besides the man whose voice was heard by the maid. The marks of at least four different pairs of feet have been found with the toes pointing from the window through which it is almost certain the man who fired the fatal shot made his exit.

Some of these foot prints are of course, those of Mrs. Sallie Saunders Lafferty who, it is known also made her exit early in the evening after drinking coffee with her father by that window.

So the case now rests. Dir Mrs. Lafferty see any one of the three men who either walked to or returned from that library window that night? Up to date she has been too ill to be questioned.

One of the theories that has been advanced is that someone tried to rob Mr. Saunders, but, finding him awake, shot him and fled when he heard the other men coming to the window. This theory however is untenable on several obvious grounds.

The police insist that they have a new clue that points conclusively to the murderer, and that they will have him in custody within forty-eight hours. But, despite the confidence of the officials, it looks as though the murder will be one of those crim mystis that are never solved.

It may be rank heresy, but there are those who think that that would not be wholly unfortunate.

Just recently nine million men have given their lives—millions of women have suered living death, and countless children have borne pain unspeakable in the task of punishing a sinful nation.

We have tried to repay murder with murder, agony with agony, and now that the moment of madness is all over—was the game worth while?

Yes, if we can obliterate such suffering for all time? No, if we cannot make the new world that is in the making safe from the hell that the old world has just passed through.

The writer has a theory that the crime and wrongdoing of the world, can be lessened by ignoring that which we cannot help.

"I don't get at what he means," said Theo.

"I do," said I to myself. Donald believes Theo is guilty, and he is trying not only to tell me so, but he is hoping that by some possibility Sallie Saunders will read what he has written and keep quiet.

"Surely," said Theo, breaking into my thought, "that chap does not think we fought in vain to save the world."

"No, dear. I think he means that, having punished our foe, we should forget."
