TRAGEDY AT MACCAN, N. S.

Amherst, Feb. 17—A shooting accident attended with fatal results occurred at Maccan on Sunday. The victim of the tragedy was Herbert Berry the government coal inspector of that place. Mr. Berry was about forty-seven years of age went out for a stroll in the woods, accompanied by a returned soldier from Amherst, Hibert Parker, Berry carrying his rifle with him.

The verdict reached at the coroner's inquest is that he tripped and fell over a cradle-hill the gun being discharged in the fall, and the bullet passing through his breast, coming out his back. His death occurred almost instantly.

MR. GADSBY'S FINE TRIBUTE TO THE GRAND OLD MAN

Sir Wilfrid Laurier was the Outstanding Figure in Canadian Politics — His Relations with His Followers Depicted — Looked Upon by His Compatriots of Quebec as Something More Than Human.

(Extracts from An Article by H. F. Gadsby in the Toronto Saturday Night.)

"Gentlemen, we have with us this evening the Right Honourable Sir Wilfrid Laurier, G. C. M. G., F. C., M. P., K. C., LL. D., and G. O. M.—the last his proudest, as it is our dearest title—Grand Old Man.

"Yes sir, that happy eminence is yours. Your right there is none to dispute. You are still the outstanding figure of Canadian politics at home where your character and achievements are known, and abroad where the memory of your gracious presence is cherished. Even now, when you are supposed to be in eclipse the casual visitor to the capital sees Laurier first and Ottawa afterwards.

"It has befallen you, sir, to receive those tributes of reverence and affection which are usually bestowed upon the illustrious dead. We have not waited to inter your bones before speaking good of you. No Roman emperor of old ever had, by stern edict, the ample apotheosis this Canada has accorded you of her own free will. We call you statesman, a name we reserve for other politicians until the tomb has closed over their virtues.

"And statues, sir! How many stone poets have embalmed you in marble? And portraits! How many limmers have traced your classic features on canvas? And books! How many authors not excluding Sir John Willison's 'Life of Laurier' in two quarto volumes, have tried out their adjectives on your career? How many universities have captured a reflected glory by adding your name to their rolls? Art, literature, learning, have all honored you, and their fruit of praise is displayed in many public places. When the new Parliament Building is opened your figure in bronze or marble will have the first place in the Hall of Fame. The other members of the Pantheon now out in the cold on Parliament Hill, will be moved inside to form a standing committee of which you are the permanent chairman."

Sir Wilfrid's relationship to his followers is thus felicitously depicted: "The Grand Old Man. I wish, sir to explain that 'Old' is not an invective word. Its implications are altogether affectionate. It is a caress, an embrace, a nact of homage, what you will. It denotes our pride in your personality, our confidence on your integrity our belief in the purity of your motives, our faith in your patriotism, and our gratitude for your wise conduct of the ship of state over many a troubled sea. It means too that you were the Father Confessor of your followers, smoothing out their cares, binding up their hurts, sometimes distributing penance. You were the great rock in a weary land, grave but kindly, serious but sympathetic a shelter for jangled ambitions. Your party calls you the Old Man. The country at large, calls you the Grand Old Man. Believe me sir, none of your many orders outshines these two which are the very mintage of love.

"Time has dealt lightly with you. Age has not bent your graceful form, dimmed your eyes, or clouded your faculties. The White Plume is a little whiter, that is all. Your wisdom is riper, your tolerance broader, your understanding more complete. Your rivals, casting a hurried glance at the clock, say that 78 is a great age. Nonsense! You, sir, I warrant, feel as young as your arteries which are 20 years younger than yourself. In short you are at the beginning of another career. If Lord Palmerston could plunge head over heels into an election at the age of 80, there is no reason why you shouldn't come out top dog when this Union Government totters to its fall.

"I can well believe sir, that your compatriots of Quebec look on you as something more than human. I have always liked that little story which made one of your admirers say, when asked if you were greater than St. Paul, 'Ah, but Laurier is only a young man yet.'"

Mr. Gadsby then refers to Sir Wilfrid's defeat on the double cry of 'Not British enough' in Ontario and 'Too British for us' in Quebec, Reciprocity and a Canadian Navy being the temporarily 'lost causes.' He then continues:

"The country said you were wrong sir, on both counts, but on both counts you were right. The inexorable logic of events has proved you so. The Yankees whom we would not truck or trade with in 1911, have not only given and got all the trade privilege outlined in the reciprocity schedules, but they have fought shoulder to shoulder with us in the Great War and may—who knows, pool interests with us to meet the economic problems of the future. As for the Canadian navy Viscount Jellicoe is now on his way to this country to tell us that your idea is just the thing the doctor ordered. What shame we would have been spared—leaning on the Mother Country to police our seas and convoy our soldier—if the Laurier Navy had been on the job when the war broke out. You did you best again in 1913 to make the Canadian navy a reality but again Mr. Borassa beat you out."

SHE WAS RIGHT ON THE SPOT

New York Sun.

A group of lively school girls held the attention of the Woman, as she waited for her train at the 116th street subway station. Giggles accompanied their recital of the day's events, and one particularly pretty youngster punctuated her story by readjustments of a mouthful of chewing gum. "Good thing Miss Brown can't see you now Ethel," laughed the plump little creature in the red tam. "I heard her scolding only this morning about the 'great American vulgarity!'" "Well, she can't" said Ethel chewing with renewed vigor. But Ethel reckoned without her host. From a group near by a tall figure in a business like blue serge suit detached itself, and advanced upon the chattering. "But she does see you Ethel. Don't you know I always appear at the psychological moment."

Not a word too much nor too little, Miss Brown returned to her friends, and Ethel flung her chewing gum far out on the track to clog the wheels of the next express while Red Tam murmured, "Can you beat it?"
