CURING HER
ABSENTMINDED HUSBAND

(Chicago News.)

"Lily Purflick hasn't any gumption" observed the bride.

"Huh?" grunted her husband, who was reading.

"I said Purflick hadn't any gumption," said the bride. "Mr. Purflick is so absentminded he will sugar his coffee three or four times at one meal, and at the price sugar is now that is criminal. And yet Lily can't seem to break him of the habit. She says it does no good to talk to him. No gumption at all. Now, if you were absentminded, John, and paid no attention to what I say I'd certainly break you of it right off."

"Huh!" said her husband, reading. "Don't you 'Huh' me!" cried his wife. "You never talked to me like that when we were engaged and you shan't do it now. What do you mean? Trying to make me mad?"

"Sure," said her husband, reading. "John!" shrieked the bride. "I can't understand you. After just a month of marriage to speak to me like that! I shall go home to mother."

"All right," said her husband, still reading. "Oh, g—goodness," cried the bride, bursting into tears. "I wouldn't have believed it of you. John, did you really mean to speak to me—like that?"

"Sure," said her husband, reading right along. "I'm going to pack right up and go home," sobbed the bride. "I never thought it would c—come to this. I sh—should think you would say something, John; can't you explain? Do you feel sick? Can't y—you take it b—back?"

"No," said her husband, reading always.

"You want m—me to g—go? Really?"

"Sure," said John, his nose deeper in the printed page. "All r—right," cried the bride. "Of all the brutes y—you are very very w—worst! I'm never c—coming back. What time does the train g—go?"

Her husband read on, but said never a word in answer. In a rage she seized the book from his grasp. He looked up in surprise.

"I asked what time the train went," she said icily.

"What train?" asked her husband.

"The train home!" she cried. "I'm leaving you forever."

"Why?" asked her husband, getting to his feet.

"Why, you told me to," she sobbed. "I s—said when you insulted me I was going h—home and you said to go right ahead. I asked you if you meant it, and y—you said 'Sure.'"

"Nonsense, Lucretia. I never heard one word," her husband asserted, taking her in his arms. "When I'm reading I never hear a thing; and I just answer yes or no, according to how

Highway of the Great Divide

In Canada, opening up an Alpine region of entrancing beauty. It will be possible to motor from Calgary to Windermere between sunrise and sunset through a hundred miles of the most glorious scenery in North America. A good automobile road runs south to Fort Steele and Cranbrook, and from Cranbrook there are excellent roads to Spokane, or eastwards through the Crow's Nest Pass, and back to Calgary. The Good Roads Association of Alberta is enthusiastic over the prospect as this will mean the advent of many tourists from all over America. The new road will also be of great benefit to the Upper Columbia Valley which has many attractions for settlers on account of the fertility of the soil and suitability for mixed farming. This valley is served by the Kootenay Central Railway, a recently constructed branch of the Canadian Pacific.

Between Banff, the popular summer resort in the Canadian Pacific Rockies and Lake Windermere, the head waters of the great Columbia River, lies an Alpine ridge of spectacular beauty, forming part of the Great Divide. This ridge is penetrated by two comparatively easy passes, the Simpson, and the Vermilion which lead into the Valley of the Kootenay River, a region abounding in game on account of its being well south of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Between the Kootenay River and the Columbia River is a small range of mountains through which the Sinclair Pass and Canyon provide an easy road. When the first surveys were made for an automobile road between Banff and Windermere it was planned to use the Simpson Pass, named after Sir George Simpson, Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company, who made this crossing in 1841. But the route over the Vermilion was found to be easier and at the same time more beautiful, and construction of the Highway of the Great Divide was commenced from opposite Castle Mountain in this direction. At the same time the road from Windermere through the Sinclair Canyon was also commenced and at the time of the outbreak of war a gap of only thirty miles separated the two roads. War put an end to construction, and a great washout destroyed several miles of the western end, so that the project seemed to have been abandoned. Now, however, the Dominion Government has made an arrangement with the British Columbia Government by which the route of the road comes under the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parks, and a substantial appropriation has been allotted to finish the work. In this way there is every prospect of the early completion of what will be the most wonderful automobile road
