LIVER TROUBLE AND HEARTBURN

All liver diseases of whatever character are diseases of the highest importance and demand closest attention.

The liver is the largest and one of the most important organs of the body. Its duty is to prepare and secrete bile, and serve as one of the filters of the body, cleansing it of all impurities and poisons. Therefore when the liver gets out of order it is the starting of trouble in nearly every part of the body.

Keep the liver active by using Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills and you will have no heartburn, constipation, biliousness, sick or bilious headaches, dull, yellow eyes, brown blotches, salivary complexion, coated tongue, jaundice, catarrh of the stomach, or the painful protruding internal or bleeding piles.

Mrs. John Kadey, Chapman, N. B., writes: "I have used Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills for some time and can recommend them to any one suffering from heartburn and liver trouble. I tried other remedies but they only relieved me for a short time. I always recommend Laxa-Liver Pills to all sufferers as I think they are a valuable remedy."

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are 25c. a vial at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

PRINCE OF WALES PERFECTED HIMSELF IN ART OF SMILING

Sombre Air, Says New York Writer, Which Marked His Arrival in Canada Gave Way to a Sunny Countenance for the Throngs Which Acclaimed Him—Tried to Adapt Himself to Every Situation—What Some St. John Girls Thought.

Now that the Prince of Wales has come to New York and gone again it is possible for some deductions to be made on this young man, who has made such a deep impression upon Canadians and Americans alike, in the matter of conjectures as to what he may or may not have learned on his trip which has just ended and which carried him throughout the Dominion of Canada and part of the United States.

This much is certain to us who saw him when he landed in St. John, N. B., that day three months ago and rode down the little main street through torrents of rain to be acclaimed at the town square by the curious populace. He has learned how to impress others with his appreciation of honor done him. This he did not know if we are to judge from his actions when he landed in Canada. If he did not know how to show his gratefulness he did not care to make his feelings known. But that is highly impossible. He is a most sincere and honest sort of fellow as every one well knows who saw him in his five days with us in New York.

But when he came to the new world he made the assertion, if I remember his words in Halifax correctly, that he had come here not merely to see the beautiful scenery and to say kind words to the people with whom he would come in contact but more for the purpose of learning more of the country's tradition its actual formation its topography, and chief among all the reasons, he said he had come to learn more of the human side of Canadian and Americans generally, to meet with them more closely and to attempt as best he could to show them that he was in fact one of them at heart, even though he had not been born in Canada.

Always a Britisher, Said Canadian.

There were those in Canada who sneered when the Prince declared that he was a Canadian at heart and that he proposed to learn to be a "regular Canadian" and to understand them. They said he was a Britisher and would always be a Britisher, that he was too stiff and that he did not appreciate their best efforts in entertaining him.

They were dead wrong. The Prince did appreciate what they did for him. To an observant student of human nature it was plain as could be that he appreciated their gaudy bunting hung in uneven streamers across their streets and as I pointed out in my articles from Canada at the time of his trip through the Maritime Provinces the Canadians did capitally in welcoming their soldier-prince, considering fearful loss of life and finances that country had experienced as a result of the war. Hardly had the smoke cleared from the battle fields of France and the wounded and sound soldiers been started back to their homeland when those at home who in reality already were being taxed to the limit under the heavy expense of the war were asked to make ready for the triumphant entry of the Prince. The word went out that at all expense and by every effort the proper ceremonies and proper settings should be arranged in each and every city he should visit, and there was not one city that fell short in its endeavors to show the young Prince that he was most welcome.

But the Canadians in their earnestness and in their uncertainty as to just what sort of an impression they were going to make being rather easily awayed to the belief that they were not appreciated jumped to conclusions and in many cases I found an absolute downheartedness among the people over the manner in which the Prince of Wales had expressed himself. Lacked Skill in Showing Appreciation

But this was not a lack of appreciation. The Prince of Wales did not know how to show them he appreciated what they had done and that he loved them for doing it. This was an act in which he had not been tutored. Instead of showing appreciation for favors and kindnesses done, it always had been the part of the Prince of Wales to expect others to show him all the courtesy and that sort of thing. And so when it came to entering a little seaport town in the early morning to ride up town through a maze of dirty and torn flags, as the case might be, he did not feel that he knew exactly how to express his feelings and so he just sat back stiffly and saluted them, impersonally and without scarcely a smile coming to his face on the entire trip.

But as he travelled he learned. No doubt he saw on his trip across the Dominion how others received the honors and profited by their actions. At any rate before he had turned back eastward after going to the West Coast he was smiling and thanking his reception committees like a real, old time politician, and by the time he reached Washington and New York he not only was smiling and extending his hands to shake those of the persons who had provided the celebrations for him but he was standing up in his automobile, his hat off, his mouth wide open, grinning and even waving his handkerchief and his walking stick toward those who honored

WELL SATISFIED WITH BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Mrs. Emile Malette, Montpelier, Que., writes:—"I have used Baby's Own Tablets for some time and am well satisfied with them. They are surely the best medicine I know of for little ones." What Mrs. Malette says thousands of other mothers say. Once they have used the Tablets for their children they would use nothing else. The Tablets are a mild but thorough laxative; are absolutely free from opiates, narcotics or other harmful drugs and may be given to the youngest baby with perfect safety and good results. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

In lower Broadway last Monday he even stood up the entire distance from the Battery to the City Hall save for two times when the jerk of the car threw him backward and caused him to sit down rather more suddenly than he had expected to do.

Learns to Beam on Things

A picture of this young fellow with face beaming, standing up and receiving the plaudits of these thousands as compared with a picture as I saw him coming up the main street in St. John, N. B., would be worth while.

In St. John he sat quite still looking from side to side with scarcely a smile placing his hand slowly to his visor occasionally. Some girls in a top floor of a hotel yelled down to him, and he looked up with almost a frown upon his face. They didn't understand it. They were heard to say later:—

"The Prince may be a good fellow, but the sure doesn't show it. He certainly knows he's the Prince of Wales all right."

But it would be difficult to find a girl in New York who would say that of him after their fine experience with him here last week. Here he has been a boy, just a boy, with all the will in the world to show this kind feeling for those who tried to please him.

That is a lesson he has learned. And is it a lesson that will be of infinite help to him. As he nears the kingship he will know more and more how to conduct himself while before audiences and while being honored—even at home. A thing which no doubt even the sturdiest and hardest set old Englishman would appreciate seeing.
