DISPOSAL OF SLASH.

Conservation, the official organ of the Conservation Commission of Canada, pays New Brunswick the compliment of publishing the rules for the disposal of slash promulgated by the Forest Advisory Commission connected with the Department of Lands and Mines. There are in all six rules, which are as follows:

1. Burn in the early spring and fall, preferably when the slash is dry but the soil damp. When the soil is very dry a fire will destroy the humus or vegetable matter which enriches the top layer of the soil, and also is much more difficult to handle.

2. If possible, have one or more neighbors assist in the burning so that the fire may be kept under control at all times.

3. Always make a light fire-break around the slash by throwing any brush or litter in for 50 feet, especially on the side adjacent to timber. This will help to confine the fire and let you get around it quickly should it start to spread.

4. If the slash adjoins timber, burn it if possible when there is a light breeze blowing away from the timber and start the fire first on the leeward side. If the slash is on a sidehill, start the fire first on the upper side, and burn downhill. When a good guard has been burned along the top, fires may be set at the foot of the slope and allowed to burn up.

5. If conditions are at all dangerous, never start a fire in the morning. The best time to start burning is after five o'clock in the afternoon of a calm day. The slash is then dry and burns readily, there is little danger of wind, and the fire burns out during the night, when it is least apt to escape.

6. Keep close watch on the area until all fires are completely out.

The drought in this province during the month of June was a most severe one, and the fact that there were few if any forest fires says much for the efficiency of the forest protection service of the Department of Lands and Mines.

Trying to save his pet fox terrier from being struck by a train on the Pennsylvania railroad at Chester, Pa., Robert Hooks, aged 14, was run down. Both legs and one arm were broken and his skull fractured. The dog bounded off the tracks ahead of his young master and escaped without a scratch. Charles Maguire, a young man, nearly lost his life while trying to get the boy out of danger. As soon as the boy regained consciousness he asked if his dog was safe. When assured that his pet had escaped he appeared to forget his own injuries. "I am awful glad," he told the nurse.

Kingston Standard: The world will have to be wary of the Huns for a very long time after the signing of peace, and Clemenceau has warned the nations of it. "Be careful, keep your powder dry," is his advice as he points out that the Huns are now as they were in the middle ages, "drunk with pride." The Huns have been disastrously beaten before, but they recovered in time and brought on the Great War; it is the duty of the world to see that they never again have the chance to bring on another.

family record of a young London soldier, T. W. Smith, who has just been demobilized. His father and four brothers all fell on July 1st, 1916, in the battle of the Somme. His sisters were all killed in air raids, one at Addiscombe in 1915 and the other two in East London in 1916, while his mother perished in a similar raid in 1917. Smith is the sole survivor of his family.

There should be a good attendance at the meeting in the City Council Chamber this evening called by Mayor Hanson to arrange for a peace celebration. Saturday, July 19th, is the day set apart by the government, and it should be fittingly observed by the people of the capital city of the province. The various local organizations which did such splendid work while the war was in progress should be well represented at tonight's meeting.

When searching premises in Cork, where an explosion injuring four persons recently took place, the police discovered over 300 gelignite bombs, capped and ready for use. These were concealed in a box and barrel two feet beneath the floor boards. The police believe the place was used as a sort of Sinn Fein reserve.

Whale fat is being used in the manufacture of margarine in Norway and Denmark. The product is said to keep long and taste well. Whale fat is even better suited for making lard. It is said that experiments are in progress in the United States to determine the possibility of making fish oils suitable for use in the human diet.
