AFFAIRS IN HUNGARY.

The rapid whirl of events in Hungary makes it difficult to follow them intelligently. When the Central Powers were defeated Hungary lost no time in declaring her independence of Austria and set up a democracy under the leadership of Count Karolyi. When the terms of peace were presented to the new government, the leader declared them impossible of acceptance and when he saw that the Allies meant it he deserted his post and threw the reins of power into the hands of the Bolsheviks under the lead of Bela Kun. This latter gentleman made desperate efforts to form an Alliance with Bolshevik Russia, and to obtain military assistance from Lenin. But Roumania lay between the Bolshevik armies and Hungary, and the Hungarian government sent an expedition to push this obstacle out of the way. At first this force met with some success, but was afterwards driven back by the Roumanians, who then invaded the Hungarian plains. Bela Kun got himself out of the way and the monarchists seized the opportunity to declare Archduke Joseph, brother of the murdered Ferdinand, as dictator. The Hapsburg still holds the position, despite the fact that Roumanian armies are in possession of Budapest and that the Allies are opposed to royal government. Hoover, the great American specialist on food control, urges the Allies to act quickly and effectively in the matter, for delay will certainly result in further troubles.

Meantime, the Roumanian forces which have overrun Hungary are disregarding the Allied protests and are robbing the country right and left in revenge for the ill-treatment meted out to the Roumanian people by the Huns when in occupation of that country.

So bitter is Roumanian feeling that it might seem necessary for the Allies to resort to force to drive them out of Hungary, and there is nothing surprising about their anger after all when we consider what they have endured from Austria-Hungary in the past. The settlement of affairs in this corner of Europe will demand the exercise of the highest statesmanship.

THE PRINCE IN QUEBEC.

Every function arranged for the programme of the visit of the Prince to Quebec, says the Telegraph, of that city, was executed with an enthusiasm and co-operation on the part of all which is gratifying in the extreme. Especially striking, because of its official formality, was the presentation of the addresses in the Legislative Council Chamber of the Parliament Buildings, in the morning. There could have been no more significant demonstration of the role of La Nouvelle France in the British Empire. The reply of the Prince in the French language was a graceful recognition of the rights and traditions of the French Canadian race. The excellence of the French employed by it is Highness very rightly evoked a tremendous ovation. The accent was the purest French, with none of the affectation of the Parisian tongue, resembling the best Norman French as used by the cultured speakers of Quebec. There was not the slightest trace of English origin in his words. Such a splendid control over the French language must compel the homage of Quebec. The bilingualism of the Prince of Wales is a practical demonstration of an ideal. It is deserving of consideration and of thought.

The death of General Sir Louis Botha, Premier of the Union of South Africa, announced today in a cable from Pretoria, will occasion great regret throughout the British Empire. General Botha commanded the Boer forces during the South African war and won distinction as a brave and intrepid soldier. When the Union of South Africa was formed he became the first premier, a position which he has filled with great tact and ability. Soon after the outbreak of the European war he personally took command of the South African forces and won the great territory of German East Africa for the British crown. The death of General Botha deprives the British Empire of one of its greatest colonial statesmen.

American sailors on mine-sweeping duty in the North Sea probably will not crave fish when they get back home. When mines are exploded in the process of clearing out the barrage, thousands of fish are killed. One of the little submarine chasers in the fleet scoops up hundreds of pounds of them each evening when operations cease for the day, and distributes them among the several vessels for food. The men enjoyed it for a time, but now hate the sight of a fish. One day the catch included a salmon which was cruising around miles away from land. Anglers say that salmon should not be so far from land.

In the debate in the House of Representatives on daylight saving, Representative Lankford of Georgia said: "A man in my district and county at Ambrose, Ga., said he got out of bed in the morning at 8 o'clock, caught a train at 7.45 o'clock, rode 14 miles to Douglas, Ga., reaching there at 7.30 o'clock, ate breakfast at 7.15 o'clock, made some purchases and caught a train back home at 7.30 o'clock—according to the last clock thirty minutes before he started."

The U. S. War Department distributing centres through which surplus war materials are sold were instructed the other day to discontinue the sale of army blankets. It was explained that the distribution was not as wide as had been hoped for, and that to give all an equal opportunity to purchase the blankets a new distribution system would be worked out.

"Has it occurred to the Prince of Wales to wonder why the Newfoundland city is called St. John's, while the New Brunswick city is called St. John?" queried the Boston Globe. "If it has, and if he discovers the reason, it is hoped he will kindly share his information with a waiting newspaper world," says the Biddeford, Me., Journal. And of course this would also refer to St. Johns, Quebec; but after that we are ready to ask about a certain well known university entitled "Johns Hopkins."

Sir Douglas Hazen is on another trip to Ottawa and report has it that this time he will be sworn in as a member of the Union government.

THROUGH OUR SIEVE

Charity begins in the cradle.
 The law of nature seldom acquits.
 The voice of scandal is never large.
 The cost of living goes on apace. In Australia kangaroos are on the jump.
 Even before the days of the yeast cake bread was always rising.
 A rover is a person who roams; also a good name for a dog.
 Seeing is believing. So is hearing, with some people.
 Perhaps it is quite natural that a man's better half should get the best of him.

In these hard times even the woman who makes her own clothes can put on frills.

Every biography of Andrew Carnegie appear to agree that he started life as a lad.

You never can tell. A fellow may be looking for trouble merely to be in a better position to dodge it.

Some men can't stand prosperity. The rest of us never have a chance to try whether we can or not.

Strange as it may seem, the more we think of some people the less we think of them.

Never put off till tomorrow what you can do today. Still the fellow who is always in a hurry doesn't necessarily get there.

For one man who buried his talent in a napkin, there are a thousand who feel that even a tablecloth wouldn't be big enough.

Let Out on Bail
 A returned soldier was arrested last evening by Herbert Saunders Liquor Inspector and was locked up overnight in a cell. He came before Police Magistrate Limerick this morning charged with being drunk and resisting arrest. He pleaded guilty to the former charge and was fined $8. To the latter charge he pleaded not guilty and was remanded until Wednesday at 2.30 o'clock. The prosecution finished its case and the returned man was let out on bail and given until Wednesday to procure his witnesses for the defence.

Auction of Rifles Today
 A large number of rifles which had been seized were sold at the Crown Land Department at auction this morning. The upset price on the rifles was about $150 and $319.50 was obtained for them. One rifle a thirty two pump gun Remington make the upset price of which was $15 sold for $33.50. Some traps and a beaver skin were included in the list of sales. A large crowd of people, about one hundred in all turned out to the auction. Among them were many returned soldiers and the bidding was at no time slow. Col. T. G. Loggie auctioned the guns and rifles off and proved no mean auctioneer.

In these eight-hour days and even less, what has become of the antiquarian who used to say man works from sun to sun, but woman's work is never done?

There is a time in every girl's life when her favorite poem says that "into each life some rain must fall." It is her favorite when mother makes her wash the dishes.
