Hetherington, the Principal of the consolidated school at Riverside sympathizing with him in the loss of his wife.

City of Fredericton—Dr. B. C. Foster.

The evening session of the Institute was opened by Deputy Mayor T. S. Wilkinson. In a few words he extended the hospitality of the city to the gathered teachers and expressed a wish that they make themselves perfectly at home. Dr. Carter thanked the Mayor for his good wishes and expressed his belief that the city is at present in its best as far as beauty is concerned.

Prof. Sinclair Laird, Dean of the School for Teachers, Macdonald College Que., was the next speaker.

He referred to the fact that man has received a liberal education whose body smoothly does the work of his mind. He is then full of life and fire, the servant of a tender conscience, to hate all violence and to respect others as himself.

Milton considered that a man is not educated unless he took up public affairs as well as his personal duties.

The individual differences of children are multitudinous. No two are alike. Many a good farmer is spoiled by being kept at school too long, that is in the kind of school we have. Many a poor clergyman would have made a good farmer. All the different personalities who are put in the same room and treated alike are said to be educated. This is not true. If there was more human handling and less instruction boys would be much better off.

The speaker said he would like to see teachers think of the boy rather than of the lesson, of the result more than the examination. Manners, courtesy and politeness are things that should be taken in at home whereas they are often thrust on the school teacher.

Prof. Laird drew several examples, showing how certain children if helped along the lines which come natural to them would become successful, whereas they would be practically failures otherwise. He told of one little boy, very talented, who composes music. He is of use with his hands and never associates with others. It would be much better for him if he received some social education.

Teachers do not always know individual circumstances. If less thought was given to the mere passing of examination and more to the life of the child as a whole the children of the city would be much better off.

If the spirit of taking advantage or all the education possible were as strong in native Canadians as in some immigrants that come into the country, conditions would be better.

Comparisons.

Comparisons were drawn from conditions in different kinds of homes touching mainly on study and the desire of the parents for the success of their children.

Sometimes fathers do take a strong interest in their children but seem not to want to show it. They are often pleased at success but hate to show it, sometimes in fear that the children may get "swelled heads".

When parental influence is in the side of the teacher there seldom is any trouble in the school with the children. Parents are sometimes jealous of teachers because of their influence with the children.

For a kindly personal interest taken in the pupils individually the pupil would be far the better and a lasting affection would be formed for the teacher.

Prof. Laird's examples were well drawn and his address was thoroughly enjoyed by all. His coming is much appreciated by the Institute and much good should result from the informal talk he delivered.

Concluding his address he said, a boy applying for a position in Germany would be asked, "How much do you know?" In France, "What examination have you passed?" In the United States, "What can you do?" In England, "What sort of a fellow are you." It would be well, said Prof. Laird, for us to combine the American and English questions, and not only this but also to follow up the pupil after he leaves school.

The Devon Quartette rendered several selections which were much enjoyed and heartily encored.

Hon. Wm. F. Roberts, Minister of Public Health was the next speaker. Hon. Dr. Roberts declared that he knew no audience before which he might stand that would give more of what he wished than teachers. The "Relation existing between Public Schools and Public Health" was the subject of the Hon. Minister.

It is by properly developed intellectualism that peace, justice and ordered liberty can be explained. Out of the very ranks of the teacher have sprung the people who have raised the standard of civilization is to present high level.

The school population is between one-quarter and one-fifth of the population of the province and on its mental and physical fitness depends the future of the country.

There is a clear partnership between the school and the Department of Public Health and the partnership is growing stronger than ever each day. The day of the stoop shouldered, white faced school master is fast passing away. Economy of young life is the only true economy.

Children are in some degree comparable with wealth and it devolves on us to see that they survive in happiness and contentment.

Here there are the parents, the public health worker and the school.

The parent's part differs in toto from that of the school. The scope of the parent is narrower. The child is so close to the eye of the parent as to blot out the rest. The system or health inspection is economical in that, the children are gathered together. That there is an added risk of contagious disease is true but it is the duty of the authorities to abate the danger as far as possible. The system is still in its infancy. In no other province in Canada has his system been inaugurated. There was no distinction as to heavier populated districts as in some parts of the Dominion. Any available doctor has to be taken, even though they may not be as good as desired. A refitting of men is to be held soon and from them the conditions should be better.

A wide benefit has been that it has been brought to the notice of the public that much of the disease may be removed. The teachings and dictates of hygienic living take no second place. Once let us get the 2,000 teachers of the province into the habit of imparting their knowledge of public health to both children and adults, conditions will be bettered a thousand per cent.

"We are on the eve of a new era—looking away from many of the old evils. In this effort it is with inborn confidence that I invite your co-operation," said Hon. Dr. Roberts in conclusion.
