WOMEN IN THE NEWS.

Mrs. Key Cammack, the handsome and youthful banker of New York tells the world the secret of her success in femininity! The board of trustees of the big New York Trust Company has made her assistant secretary making her the second bank official in New York. She is a southern woman, who first came into fame as a writer of short stories. She entered the bank last fall to take up educational work among the women employees. Now, in Boston of course we side is brightened by beauty anyway, have our own standards, and Boston But over in New York men folks are man are famed for indifference to anything frilly; all they want is efficiency at the office and every Boston fire-different. Mrs. Cammack tells the girls over there never to sacrifice an iota of femininity. If they do, she declares they give away so much business success potentiality. "The womanly woman is the acquaintance of desirability" is the way she puts it. It can be overdone, however, and the "feminine" type of woman the handkerchief dropper, the dolly-eyes and such stuff have no chance, she says. In the same breath she says the business woman should shun frills in the office and shouldn't wear mannish models. When asked what she should wear, Mrs. Cammack said the ideal garb for business is a "modish gown of blue serge."

Mrs. Laurens Morgan Hamilton, formerly Mrs. Georgy Wenzlick Warren, who wed the youthful grandson of the great J. Pierpont and visited Boston on the honeymoon a few weeks ago, slipped the French liner Lafayette at New York day before yesterday with the new and beardless hubby, eluding his watching parents. They got aboard 24 hours before the boat sailed, without entering their names and this morning are well on their way from interference. The Morgans and Hamiltons are not yet reconciled and won't be according to family counsel.

Mrs. Henry Moscovitz prominent, in New York social and industrial welfare work and active in politics, has culminated her efficient war work by going into the movies with the Universal at a whole of a salary. She will carry out her ideas of social regeneration through the films.

Miss Margaret Greer of Chicago, stepped hard on the cave-man stuff yesterday, although for a while Geo. Burlingame, 22, four years her senior thought he was getting away with it. He wanted her to marry him. She refused. He pulled a revolver and threatened to perforate her if she didn't come along to the marriage license clerk. She went, keeping a weather eye for a cop. The clerk asked for her birth certificate as she was a little hazy—or pretended to be—about her age. She started home to get the paper, with George by her side. He relaxed vigilance for a moment and she quietly phoned the police. George now is in a cell declaring any man with pep would have done the same as he did. He showed the police that the gun didn't have any trigger, as he simply was playing a four-card flush pat. The judge let him go and Margaret says he'd better stay away.

Mrs. Katherine Beddingfield of New York says she is a woman apart this morning all because she not only has a grandmother living, but a granddaughter came yesterday, and is Ruth Klein. She now has living her mother grandmother, great-grandmother and great-great-grandmother.

ALLAN CUP
ARE UNFAIR

* Toronto Globe: "Jerry" Laflamme is anything but pleased over the manner in which the Allan Cup games have been scheduled, and he avers that Granites were beaten more owing to exhaustion than to the superiority of the Sudbury team. Laflamme also points out that the Northerners are now showing signs of the wear and tear, and even should they win tonight they will be sorry representatives of the East against the Falcons on Saturday. In case U. of T. are victorious, they, too, will hardly be able to do themselves justice against the Islanders. Laflamme never advances all this when his team is beaten. He has simply expressed an opinion that is in accordance with the views of the majority of local fans.

ATTRACTIONS
AT FREDERICTON
PLAYHOUSES

At the Opera House for the next three days is "Blind Husbands."

A photoplay can be good and yet not have an important star as its magnet. Here is a play that will stand up alongside of the good films. Tragic in theme and of familiar triangle situation, it has acting so forceful attention is held from the start.

When a man is director, author and star in a production, but one result is possible, a full understanding of the play and the character. So Eric Von Stroheim steps out from being the German officer in other plays and does one of the male vampire roles himself. He has supplied a new character in the movies, recalling that character in "Dracula," said to have been the original of male vampires. This man shows how he can, with mock courtesy, intrigue women until he attempts to snare the wrong woman wife of the wrong man. The result is a fight over a cliff and exit music.

The scenes are natural. The Tyrolean Alps form a sturdy background for the virile acting. In the support of Francella Billington as the wife are Jack Errin, P. Sam de Grasse and Valerie Germonprez.

"The Fortune Hunter"

At the Gaiety Theatre today and tomorrow will be shown "The Fortune Hunter." This picture is chock full of wholesome fun. The most humorous of Mr. Smith's dialogue has been retained and is given place among appropriate mirthful events of rural simplicity. The narrative assumes its happy tenor immediately after it gains headway in the rustic environs following the introductory reel. It centers around a business failure, a college man, good looking and nattily clothed who swoops down upon the unsuspecting village of Radcliffe to capture its heiress, whoever she may be, and thus assure himself a future of affluence. He is armed with a book of rules framed by a chum which denies him the things he prefers and forces upon him such habits as he previously avoided.

His first appearance in church as escort of the village gossip is fraught with humorous incidents. It is on this occasion he encounters his quarry, the banker's daughter, and the village cutup's sweetheart. Though his interest in the young woman appears perfunctory his scheme moves to what threatens to be a successful conclusion. In the interim "the fortune hunter" has developed a fondness for a comely young woman, the daughter of an impoverished druggist and inventor. This is the uncomfortable position the young man finds himself in after he has built up the druggists establishment to a profitable business and kept a dishonest promoter from getting possession of his invention. It's an awkward situation and Earle Williams, who acts the title part, is helped out handily.

Mr. Williams' conduct in the stellar role is faultless and Miss Jean Paige answers all the requirements as the daughter of the poor druggist. But the success of the piece is due its author, Winchell Smith, and to Tom Terriss, who staged it for pictures. It's one of the year's cinematic delights.

There are always the fewest people where there are the finest surprises.
