IN A SCHOOL

Lexington, Jan. 22-Thirty-five boys and girls of the lower grades were this afternoon conducted from the second floor of their school to the schoolyard by their two teachers and they did not know that the building-the old Adams Grammar School on Massachusetts av., East Lexington-in which they were eating their lunch was affee until they had safely filed out into the frigid air.

One of the boys returning for the afternoon session saw smoke issuing from the roof of the building and told Miss Helen Hannon, a teacher. Miss Hannon went upstairs to the lunch room on the second floor, and told Miss Harriet Foss, the teacher in charge of the pupils, that the schoolhouse was burnling. The children were then led nto the schoolyard.

John Sawyer, the janitor, emptied an extinguisher on the fire in an effort to quench the flames which started in the other side of the building from an overheated furnace or defective chimney. The fire worked up through the partitions and into a blind attic, where sit burned through the roof in many places before it was extinguished by the Lexington Fire Department. which saved the building from destruction.
