THE MELLOW WISDOM OF A STATESMAN OF TODAY

Hon. Chauncey M. Depew Recounts His Experience in a Speech Delivered on His Eighty-fifth Birthday—His Recollection of the Great Panic of 1873—George Washington and Abraham Lincoln were Practical Idealists.

(From a speech by the Hon. Chauncey M. Depew at his eighty-sixth birthday dinner at the Montauk Club Brooklyn, April 29, 1920, being the twenty-ninth annual birthday dinner given him by that club. Mr. Depew's birthday is April 23 but the club conditions fixed April 29 for the dinner.)

The panic of 1873 and the recollections of it start an interesting train of thought. We are reproducing in a way much the same situations as preceded the catastrophe. We came out of the civil war with our national debt raised from less than a hundred millions to over three billions. Many were in doubt and few were optimistic as to our ability to stand the burden of taxation or ever to pay it. We successfully did both.

We have come out of the present war with our national debt of a thousand millions increased to twenty-five billions. Are we that much richer; have we that much greater command of resources and ability to bear taxation than we had from the close of the civil war to make possible the practical extinguishment of our national debt? If so, and I think so, then the experiences of fifty years ago will happily be repeated in our future. But we did more than pay this debt.

We rehabilitated a large section of the country which had been devastated by the war. We did more. We turned a hostile population into loyal and patriotic citizens, equally as earnest for the preservation and glory of the Union as those who had fought to preserve it. Our civil war was followed by an era of unlimited speculation, the launching of innumerable, both legitimate and fraudulent enterprises and the sudden accumulation of large fortunes. It was also marked by a tremendous rise in prices and wages. These results were due to an inflated currency, a rotten credit system and no control of banking privileges. When the craze had reached its peak or highest point then came the crash.

Happily for the United States, we have had three practical idealists. The most dangerous of men is an idealist in power who is carried away by his ambitions or his dreams, without the governing wheel of wisdom and common sense. The most wonderful of practical idealists was George Washington. He was the only man of his time who could have successfully carried through the American revolution, who could have successfully brought warring factions and State rights enthusiasts to a Constitution so wise that it meets the needs of the country today, as it has during 131 years, and is the only instrument of government which has been unchanged during that period.

The Duc d'Aumale, one of the sons of Louis Philippe, at one time King of France, told me that when his father was an exile in this country during the French Revolution he was a guest at Mount Vernon; that George Washington said to him that he had never done anything which he regretted or said anything which he cared to recall, that when his father was King, when he was urged by his Ministers or his sons to take some action he would often refuse by saying "If I do that I cannot say for myself what George Washington said for himself." But there was a cog loose in Louis Philippe's machinery and he lost his throne.

The greatest practical idealist of his time was Abraham Lincoln. He selected for his cabinet the ablest men there were in the country, and from the different great parties. None of them had a mind which ran on the same track with Lincoln's mind. Nevertheless he utilized the great abilities of each of them and so coordinated and administered their combined talents for the success of his practical idealism that he saved the Union and placed it upon eternal foundations.

The greatest practical idealist of our time was Theodore Roosevelt. When four hundred years of effort had failed to unite the Atlantic with the Pacific the waters of the two great oceans met in the Panama Canal, and the East and West were united by the practical idealism of Theodore Roosevelt. He saw the possibilities of universal war in the conflict then raging between Russia and Japan. The two nations were brought together at Portsmouth and a peace was declared of infinite value not only to Russia and Japan but to the whole world by the practical idealism of Theodore Roosevelt.

velt. So he brought peace to the industrial world and safety to the financial world by the same practical idealism. He first saw the danger to the whole world, and especially to the United States, in the military aggressiveness of the German Empire. He aroused the American people to the necessity for preparedness. By his earnest appeal and by the confidence which his countrymen reposed in him he brought to the front, above economic and materialistic considerations, the underlying idealism in the American character. Our entrance into this war, though late, nevertheless so effectively, and the victory which saved civilization and liberty were all largely due to the foresight, the courage, the invincible energy and the practical idealism of Theodore Roosevelt.

A college rowing crew were located at Peekskill on the Hudson while they were training on the river. Passing up to their homes they leaped onto the terrace of our home and began an active discussion of the past and present. One of the said: "The past can teach us nothing. My father is over seventy years old and I am twenty-one, but I know more than he does." My father was sitting, according to custom in the late afternoon, upon the piazza smoking his pipe and reading his newspaper. The young man turned around and said to him, "Well, old gentleman, what do you think of that?" My father replied, "I am thinking what a dream fool your father must be."

FIFTIETH FOR BABE RUTH

New York, May 3—"Babe" Ruth's colossal smash over the grandstand at the Polo Grounds Saturday was the fiftieth home run the super-slugger has made in his major league career of six years.

He joined the Red Sox in 1915, and in that year played in only 42 games, making four home runs. In 1916, Ruth made only 3 home runs in 67 games, but in those days he was used only occasionally as a pinch hitter, and gave most of his time to pitching. In 1917, Ruth, serving as a pitcher, had a chance to make only 2 home runs, but in 1918, when he was used more frequently in the field, he hammered out 11 circuit drives.

Last year he made 29 homers, a new world's record, and the slam yesterday completed a striking list of 50.

The friend in need is nearly always broke. Every now and then one runs across someone who believes everybody has a right to his own opinions.

MAKING BETS FROM SHIPS

New York, May 4—Betting by wireless, a new form of sport has grown up among transatlantic travellers. Steamships arriving in English seaports lately report many turf transactions among both passengers and crew. Information on the races, that is tips and the latest odds are radioed to the big vessels in midocean and the sports aboard back their "fancies" by wireless. Several captains have picked winners in this way and have found nice fat purses awaiting them when their ships touched port.

Mr. R. A. H. Smith of Winnipeg was a visitor in this city yesterday.

KEEP WINTER LAYERS

They shell out the eggs when prices are the highest, and pay the best. The Barred Plymouth Rock easily holds first place as the best general purpose fowl. They are prolific layers and can stand the severe cold of our winters. During the months of December, January and February of last winter I gathered 515 eggs from a pen of twelve hens. In an experience of thirty years with many varieties, I never owned such a pen of high class layers. Eggs from the pen are now testing 90 per cent. fertility. I will have for sale a limited number of eggs for hatching from two choice pens, headed by Ontario A. C. cocks, at $2.50 and $2 per setting of fifteen. As many of these settings are spoken for, no time should be lost in placing orders.

If you want Single Comb White Leghorns I can supply eggs from stock which won the championship at the Fredericton and Moncton shows at $3 and $3 per setting.
