IMPERIAL PRESS PARTY WARMLY WELCOMED TO THE CAPITAL CITY

ticularly the markets of Europe and the West Indies. We have also the great Minto coal mines at our door and the opportunities for new industries particularly those requiring wood for raw materials are great. And as to our climate, I believe it is recognized as being one of the most healthful in the world.

And lastly, I cannot help but say to you that we boast of a newspaper press, which for enterprise, influence and the dissemination of news, is unsurpassed, except in the foremost cities of the Dominion.

I hope that most of you before entraining this afternoon will have a further opportunity of seeing more of this the "Capital" City.

Address in Reply

Sir Campbell Stuart replied to the Mayor's address of welcome and his speech was listened to with much pleasure. He said that all were delighted with the city of Fredericton and it was a matter of deep regret to them that their tour of the Maritime Provinces was drawing to a close. He was especially interested in Fredericton because of his long friendship with Dr. George R. Parkin, a former citizen, who was trustee for the Rhodes Scholarships and was recognized as a great citizen of the British Empire. He was confident that England was waiting for the day when the Sons of the Empire would set with her in council. The great war had created for the British Empire a league of her own nations. The war had left the world upside down and topsy turvey, but for the nations of the British Empire he felt sure that the war had not been fought in vain. They would have a league of nations under a common flag under which they would, please God, all live and die.

A Labor Man

Mr. George Isaacs of London, chairman of the printing trade, was the next speaker. He was pleased to be present as the representative of those who assisted in the work of producing the newspapers and appreciated the hearty welcome given the visitors. He had been told by a little booklet which he had read on the train that the citizens of Fredericton were a happy people. The sentiment of the people towards Great Britain had been well expressed in the late war when so many of Canada's sons laid down their lives for the cause. They certainly had formed a league of Empire and a league of peoples. The very fact that he was present on a common platform with Sir Campbell Stuart was in itself a sign of the times. Sir Campbell represented one of the largest groups of newspapers in Great Britain. He (Isaacs) did not own a newspaper, but he spoke for the men who helped to print the newspapers. He was proud that representatives of the working men had been invited to attend the Imperial Press Conference. It was proof of the true spirit of democracy which prevailed in the old country. It was the spirit of democracy which should be interpreted in all countries. They were on the verge of a revolution, but it would be a revolution which would be guided by intelligence and would be brought about without a shock which would be hurtful to anybody. He believed that Canada was a land of bright faces and of people possessed of great hearts and he felt sure the delegates would enjoy their stay in this country.

Dr. Crockett, M. P. P.

Col. H. F. McLeod, M. P. was on the program to reply to the speeches of the British delegates, but being unable to attend because of illness Dr. Crockett, M. P. P. was called upon to fill in the gap and acquitted himself well. He thought there was little to be added to what had been said but he wished to thank Sir Campbell Stuart for his pleasing reference to Sir George R. Parkin, who had left a fragrant memory in Fredericton and had been without a peer as an inspirer of the youth of the province. His friend, Mr. Isaacs had spoken about democracy, and he had been much interested in his remarks. The great war had made the world safe for democracy and he hoped that all would now do their utmost to make democracy safe for the world. He appreciated the powerful influence wielded by the British journalists assembled before them. They had a firm grasp of foreign affairs as well as Colonial affairs, but disdained the technicalities which sometimes engaged the minds of smaller men. The doctor expressed the regret that there were not more points of great historic interest to show the visitors, but went on to say that within the walls of the chamber where they had assembled had been fought the early political battles which gave to the people the boon of responsible government. He referred to the portraits of Lord George, George III and of his Consort Queen Charlotte which adorned the walls, and told the visitors that New Brunswick had given to the Imperial Parliament Mr. Bonar Law, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and also Lord Beaverbrook who was our own Max Aitken. He mentioned the fact that the latter had emulated the example of Cecil Rhodes by establishing Scholarships at the University of New Brunswick. "Will Ye Nae Come Back Again" were the appropriate words he used in concluding his address.

The Mayor's Health

Mr. Anderson, of the Irish Homestead, in proposing the health of the Mayor of Fredericton, made mention of the fact that he was a Fredericton man himself and his mother was born at Elmcroft in this city, and he was the grandson of Sir Neville Parker, a former Master of the Rolls for New Brunswick, whose portrait he had seen in the Supreme Court Chamber. He had visited his mother's old home during the day and had been deeply touched, and though he was born in Cork, Ireland, he felt that he should be a Canadian. He was a director of the Irish Homestead and was connected with a great movement led by Sir Horace Plunkett, the object of which was to build up a body of public opinion in Ireland, which it was hoped would make that country an integral part of a great Empire. This body refused to discuss religion or politics, and had united people of the most extreme views. He was hopeful that it would eventually bring about a peaceful settlement of the Irish question. He had pleasure in proposing the health of the Mayor of Fredericton.

Mayor Reid replied briefly to the toast and at his suggestion the gathering rendered the National Anthem and dispersed.

The visitors were driven to the C. N. R. Station where they embarked in special trains furnished by the C. N. R. and C. P. R. for Quebec. Just as the first contingent reached the station, a heavy electrical storm broke, and set fire to a barn in South Devon, owned by Albert Miles, and soon leveled it to the ground. It gave a tragic finish to the departure of the distinguished visitors, and was the chief topic discussed as the train pulled out.
