GERMANS ARE PLANNING A BIG MILITARY COUP

German Republican Officers' Association Issues a Warning Against It—The Ex-Kaiser Would Like to Give Out a Newspaper Interview—His Health Said to Have Improved of Late—Special Letter from the German Capital.

(Special Correspondent to The Mail.) (Copyright, 1920, by Cross-Atlantic Newspaper Service, Inc.)

Berlin, July 25—A military coup d'etat is being prepared by the German National Party and the leaders of this party before long will endeavor to bring about a military dictatorship the Communists maintain. The chief mouthpiece of the Communists, the "Rote Fahne," writes:

"There is only one salvation and that is the immediate establishing of political workingmen's Councils. The more evident it becomes that parliamentarism is hopelessly powerless to solve the revolutionary problems the more pressing becomes the necessity of such councils. The Soviet state is the only form of government that safeguards the interests of the masses of the people."

The "Offiziersvereinigung der deut-schen Republik" (Association of German Republican officers) has issued the following proclamation to all royal German officers:

"The air is full of rumors which indicate that preparations are being made to bring about a new violent revolutionary coup. While we are not in a position to ascertain whether these rumors are true we consider it our duty to admonish all German officers not to permit themselves to be carried off their feet by political criminals or madcaps. We are strongly convinced that a dictatorship of the right is just as impossible as dictatorship of Proletarians. An attempt at a new Revolution no matter from which side it comes, can only mean the beginning of civil war and new dreadful misery for our poor people and country. It is the sacred duty of every one of us to do everything within our power to prevent such a catastrophe, and to assist out national life to progress along the path of law and order."

Reports from Doorn in Holland where the Kaiser has taken up his residence, says that Wilhelm would gladly consent to be interviewed by an English or American newspaper man or good standing, especially since the German elections, but his surroundings will not permit this.

A German officer who recently was received at Doorn has, however, apparently been talking rather freely, for in military circles here the story goes that the success of the German National Party at the elections has been a source of great encouragement to the exiled monarch, who once more hopes that his return to Germany may be wanted by the German people and that the former enemies of Germany may consent if it becomes clear that the reestablishment of the monarchy is the only way to put an end to the present political chaos.

No Better Health

No longer haunted by the fear of a trial before a court of international judges, the Kaiser is now said to be in much better health and the fits of despondency which were exceedingly trying to his surroundings have nearly disappeared. He has become an enthusiastic gardener, and spends many hours daily working in the gardens at Doorn. He has given up the felling of timber as too strenuous, as also the sawing of wood, but part of his time is devoted to the writing of his memoirs, through which he hopes in time to prove that personally he did everything within his power to prevent the war, but his efforts in this direction were frustrated by the Crown Prince and his following.

The Women Did It

That it was the women of Germany who brought about the political defeat of the coalition government at the recent German elections is the firm opinion of the "Berliner Tageblatt."

Women, the paper says, are impulsive, irrational creatures who, like the Irish, are always "agin the government," and at the elections the high price of butter, the increased tram fares or one of the many other unpleasant consequences of the war caused them to cast their votes for either of the opposition parties out of sheer contrariness without asking for the real causes.
This time it was principally the reactionary parties who benefited by the female vote, but should they ever succeed in getting back into power, the Tageblatt warns them it would be well to remember that in a subsequent election the women would surely go against them.

Until they have been trained and educated politically, the paper concludes, the women will keep the country continually swinging from one extreme to the other, and it is a lamentable fact that there are a great many male voters who are as impulsive and unreliable as the women.

In the meantime, the parties victorious at the elections are apparently no better off than the defeated majority Socialists. Allies during the election campaign, when the main object was to drive the coalition government out of power, the German National Party and the German People's Party are already bitter enemies, and none of them controls a sufficient number of votes in the Reichstag to dare undertake the risk of forming a government.

One of the chief organs of the reactionary German National Party "Der Tag" writes in this connection:

"Our party has not the slightest desire to take upon itself the fetters of Cabinet Ministers. We shall simply await the evolution of events. For the sake of the party it will undoubtedly be better not to submit to the tortures of the Procrustean bed of coalition.
The possibility always exists that the radicals may commit the blunder of putting forward demands that are not in accord with the will of the majority of the German people, and in that case the German National Party may feel called upon to make highly important decisions."

In the opinion of the "Berliner Tageblatt" the last words contain a thinly veiled threat and must be taken to mean that under certain conditions the German National Party may resort to force, or in other words, attempt a coup d'etat.

What at least part of the German National Party cannot forgive their former allies, the People's Party, is that the latter refuse to drive the Jews out of Germany and in this connection the "Deutsche Zeitung" writes: "It has been sufficiently clear that under the leadership of Stresemann the People's Party is tied to the Jews and for this reason it is useless as an ally in the fight for the rights of the German people."

The German National Party on the other side has publicly stated that in this struggle it considers it its duty to point out the Jews as the bitterest and most dangerous enemies of Germanism.
"There is for us no higher duty than anti-semitism. The Jews must be driven from German soil."

The scheme of syndicate of German-Americans to start a floating gambling resort on a large steamer to be anchored outside the three mile line at Stettin has been frustrated by the Prussian authorities, although the ship had already been chartered for the season by the syndicate. The authorities maintain that during the present shortage of tonnage, Germany has no ships to spare for enterprises of this kind.
